

Chapter 1840 A Real Connection

Brandon helped Janet to a seat. As he listened to her, his concern was evident.

After Janet finished speaking, Brandon shook his head and said, "But you don't look well. I'm worried this will haunt you forever."

Wren echoed, "This painful memory could hinder your recovery. I recommend hypnosis because your health comes first."

Vinson was silent for a moment, looking at Janet. Finally, he said, "I don't think Janet is as fragile as you believe. Her time captive with Jeremy was tough, but it hasn't broken her. She's faced so much already; this memory is just one more thing. She just needs time to work through it."

Holding Brandon's hand tightly, Janet smiled at Vinson and declared confidently, "I've faced this alone before, and now it's just a memory. With you all by my side, I'm not scared of anything. It won't harm my health. Don't worry."

Seeing Janet so determined, Brandon let out a resigned sigh. "Just don't overdo it. Let me know if it becomes too much."

Janet nodded and assured him, "I'll be okay. Don't worry."

Watching Janet closely, Wren conceded, "Alright, I'll adjust your medication in the next few days to ease your pain."

After chatting for half an hour, Janet drifted back to sleep, her strength sapped.

Brandon looked visibly concerned, prompting Wren to reassure him, "This is typical. She won't be in pain while she sleeps, and it'll help her heal quicker. As long as she doesn't sleep more than twenty hours a day, she'll be alright."

Brandon nodded, then carried Janet inside to lie down. Shortly after, Wren and Vinson left.

With Janet in his arms, Brandon used his foot to softly close the door and then brought her to bed.

He was anxious that distressing memories might upset her, so he held her close, watching her face for any sign of discomfort.

If Janet showed any signs of pain, he planned to wake her up right away, believing it would ease her suffering.

Maybe it was Brandon's presence that comforted her; Janet slept soundly for a few hours until a frown from her caused Brandon to stir.

Opening her eyes, Janet felt an abrupt shift from a chilling lab to a warm embrace. The distinct cool scent of Brandon, his close, comforting presence, and his reassuring face helped chase away much of her fear and the dark memories that lingered.

Janet smiled, burying her face in Brandon's arms, and asked in a light tone, "How did you know I wasn't feeling well?"

Brandon responded with a gentle pat on her back, saying, "I noticed you frowning in your sleep, and I figured something might be bothering you, so I woke you up."

As he spoke, Brandon pulled Janet closer. Recalling her distressed look, he felt a strong urge to make Jeremy experience the same pain Janet had.

Pressing her chin into Brandon's shoulder, Janet smiled and said, "We must really be connected. You woke me right as I was having a nightmare."

With a tender smile, Brandon patted her back and assured her, "Don't worry, I'll always wake you if you're not feeling well."

Janet pondered how Brandon could always tell when she was uncomfortable, given they didn't have any sort of special bond like in the movies. Initially, she thought Brandon was just trying to comfort her with sweet words.

But then, something struck her. She looked up and saw the redness in Brandon's eyes. Surprised, she asked, "Have you been up all night?"