

Chapter 1845 Do You Want To Lure Jeremy Out...

Over the next three days, everything appeared calm. Wren and Vinson adjusted Janet's medication three times each day, helping her recover rapidly. Without Brandon's presence, she might have already been discharged from the hospital.

Janet spent some time drawing using a pen and notebook the nurse had provided, while Brandon busied himself by peeling an apple for her. He was surprised to see that the notebook was already filled with grids. Janet was busy sketching a dress design.

Brandon looked over her shoulder and smiled at the draft, asking, "Has your design muse returned as well?"

Janet's pen seemed to move with its own intelligence, creating lines and strokes that could captivate anyone.

Brandon stood next to her bed, apple in hand, watching Janet paint. The room felt warm and filled with harmony.

Suddenly, a loud noise broke the peace.

They heard screams and the sound of a crash. Someone shouted that an ambulance had flipped over with a patient still inside.

Janet's heart raced. She turned to see a message on Brandon's phone that displayed a name she knew all too well.

Jeremy!

Just reading his name sent chills down Janet's spine.

"How dare he come to Barnes! Where is he?" Janet snapped, her voice laced with disdain as painful memories of Jeremy filled her thoughts.

Brandon initially wanted to turn off the phone screen and dismiss the message as a mistake from his subordinate, claiming Jeremy had left. However, seeing Janet's determined and angry look stopped him from feigning a smile.

He sighed, feeling trapped, and told Janet the latest news about Jeremy.

Janet saw the mix of frustration and guilt on Brandon's face. She embraced and comforted him, reassuring, "Don't worry, you've done more than enough. While you were here supporting my treatment, you ensured Jeremy had no way to escape. Nobody else could have managed that. Jeremy is terrible, but you outmatched him."

Leaning against Janet's shoulder, Brandon confessed, "If I had been truly thorough, I would have eliminated Jeremy long ago. I shouldn't have let you endure so much pain. It's all my fault."

They embraced each other warmly. As she gently patted his back, Janet inquired, "What's your plan

"Absolutely not! Don't even think about going near him. Keep your distance, no matter what!" Brandon said firmly.

He was determined not to let Janet anywhere near Jeremy again. The risks were simply too high.

Janet was unaccustomed to seeing Brandon so intense. She felt a mix of sympathy and affection. After reassuring him, she looked concerned and asked, "Do you want to lure Jeremy out yourself? What are you going to do?"

Jeremy had been lurking outside the hospital for a while, waiting for a chance to confront either Brandon or Janet. If they didn't appear, Jeremy wouldn't make a move. Despite Brandon's efforts to secure the area with bodyguards, they were no match for Jeremy's determination.

Brandon nodded resolutely and said, "Once I've confirmed where Jeremy is, I'll confront him myself."

Hearing the determination in Brandon's voice, Janet felt anxious but knew arguing would be pointless. She sighed helplessly and said, "Please be cautious. While I would love to deal with Jeremy myself, you're the one who matters most to me."

Brandon reassured her with a gentle kiss. "Don't worry, I'm not concerned about Jeremy's petty tricks. I'll be alright."

Janet agreed. "You're the best. We should increase our security. As long as I stay here, Jeremy won't dare approach."

The security in the high-level VIP ward was tight, with multiple layers of bodyguards throughout the hospital and additional guards stationed by Brandon, ensuring that the ward was heavily protected.

After a moment of thought, Brandon finally said, "Please stay here and wait for me. I'll be back in half an hour. Rest and look forward to hearing about my success."

To guarantee Janet's safety, he was committed to eliminating the threat posed by Jeremy once and for all.

"Okay, I'll wait for you," Janet responded, clearly worried.

Brandon then turned and left with a determined stride.
