

Chapter 1957 The Same Type As Him

After lunch, Brandon and Janet returned to their bedroom for a break.

Brandon began to express his concerns. "Anson acts so impolitely. He's only met your dad a few times, yet he proposed to visit his home and even stayed for a meal. He doesn't behave like a foreign businessman."

"How do foreign businessmen handle business cooperation?" Janet asked curiously.

"Foreign businessmen keep their professional and personal lives separate," Brandon explained. "They wouldn't invite someone to their homes, even if they've been partners for years. At most, they might host a few close associates at a private winery or club. They maintain strong boundaries and adhere strictly to rules. If Anson's family has been in business for generations, shouldn't he know this?"

Janet frowned, thinking it over before replying, "Maybe he got along well with Dad and wants to deepen the cooperation."

"There's no such thing in business," Brandon countered. "Businessmen only care about interests."

"Or perhaps his parents are keen to move back, and he wants to secure some reliable friends for them here in advance," Janet suggested.

Janet didn't think ill of Anson since he was a guest of her father.

Brandon rubbed his eyebrows and conceded. "Maybe. Your dad has been in the business world for so long, I trust his judgment."

He then grew more serious. "Although I trust your dad, we should still be cautious about Anson. Don't have private contact with him for safety's sake."

Janet laughed. "Are you worried about my safety, or are you just jealous? I only looked at him a bit more. I don't find him handsome; he just looks somewhat familiar."

"Familiar? Have you met him before?" Brandon became more vigilant.

Janet had glanced in Anson's direction from time to time; that was why Brandon had kept a wary eye on him.

Brandon had noticed that not only were Anson's looks striking, but they were also somewhat similar to his own. Both men carried themselves with a stern and serious demeanor, and even Anson's cold, rational approach to business negotiations was reminiscent of Brandon's style.

Yet, Anson was quite sociable in private, always finding new topics to discuss with Janet, which bothered Brandon.

Janet noticed Brandon's discomfort and took his hand, trying to reassure him. "I think he looks familiar, but I'm positive I've never met him before. That's why I found it odd and looked at him a bit more. There's nothing more to it. My heart is completely yours, so there's no need for you to feel jealous."

Brandon felt reassured by her declaration of love. He leaned down and kissed her. "I'll look into it."
