Johanna, who had been speaking favorably about Brandon, didn't anticipate suddenly becoming the target herself.

She was taken aback momentarily but quickly gathered herself. She responded with indignation, "Of course I didn't know! If I had been aware of Brandon's impulsive decision to give up the baby, I would have been incensed!"

Janet gave Johanna a pointed look and voiced her agreement. "I felt the same. It's irresponsible for Brandon to decide to give up the baby without even allowing me to begin treatment!"

Johanna's heart dropped. The more composed Janet seemed, the greater Johanna's concern grew.

It was evident that Janet was deeply hurt this time. She wasn't going to be mollified by a few apologetic words.

Johanna sighed deeply and advised, "Janet, it's crucial you look after your health first. Once you're in a better place, we can think about how to handle Brandon. Remember, your father and I are always here to support you. We will ensure Brandon faces the consequences!"

With a light smile, Janet grasped Johanna's arm and replied in a childlike tone, "You and Dad are the best. But remember, I'm pregnant now. I need to keep calm. We can revisit this later."

Johanna gently patted Janet's hand, reassuring her in a soothing voice, "Of course, dear. You're pregnant and that makes you our priority. Do whatever you need to feel comfortable. It's crucial you take excellent care of yourself, understood?"

After a moment of thoughtful consideration, Janet remarked, "The doctor was optimistic this morning about my recovery. I think it's best if I head home to recuperate. I'll pick up some medications from the hospital and then go."

Johanna nodded thoughtfully in agreement. Wherever Janet decided to recover, the top-notch obstetrician they had enlisted would be at her side, and certainly, the comforts of home would far exceed those of the hospital.

Before Johanna could reply, Janet smiled and said, "Mom, please arrange for someone to help me pack up my things. I'm bored to death in this hospital. I want to go home and rest properly now."

Did she mean returning to their home?

Johanna grasped Janet's intention instantly. She knew Janet was upset with Brandon and wanted to go back to her parents' home. 📍

Johanna silently worried for Brandon. To avoid letting Janet know that they were aware of Brandon's intent to persuade her to have an abortion,

Johanna quickly instructed the servants to pack
Janet's belongings.

When Brandon arrived at the hospital to have lunch with Janet, he found her ward empty. He was informed that Janet had been discharged an hour earlier.

With a look of dismay, Brandon pushed open the door to Frank's office. Frank gave him an awkward smile, but it faded under Brandon's icy gaze.

Clearing his throat, Frank said somewhat helplessly,
"Janet found out from another patient that you wanted her to have an abortion. She then confirmed it with her doctor and, in a fit of rage, packed her things and left with her mother."

Worried that Brandon might become anxious, Frank tried to reassure him, "Don't worry. Janet's recovery is going well, and she has her obstetrician with her.
Staying at her parents' for a few days might be best.
Considering she's upset with you, it's not good for the baby's health for her to be constantly angry."

Brandon rested his forehead in his hand, his worry deepening not only for Janet's health but also because she was furious with him.

Brandon quickly dialed Janet's number, but she hung up immediately. When he tried again, he discovered that his number had been blocked by her.
