

Chapter 1912 On The Top Search List

Late in the evening, after attending an afternoon tea with affluent ladies, Johanna entered the living room in high heels. She gave Janet a worried look and asked anxiously, "How is everything? Were you hurt?"

She then turned to the butler and commanded, "Get an obstetrician to check on Janet immediately."

"Yes," the butler answered and departed.

Grasping Johanna's hand, Janet questioned, "Mom, what's the rush? I'm okay."

With a heavy sigh, Johanna confessed, "Please don't hide anything from me. I watched the video where you were grabbed by someone in the restaurant. Thankfully, Draco intervened just in time. Otherwise, I can't imagine what might have happened!"

A thought then struck Johanna, and she exclaimed, "Oh, I must remind the butler to arrange a substantial gift for W Marks later."

Only at that moment did Janet understand that Johanna had seen the restaurant video. She assured her mother she was truly fine, and Johanna's concerns were only eased after the doctor confirmed it.

Janet coaxed her mother onto the sofa and handed her a glass of water, saying, "Mom, have some water to calm down."

Johanna, feeling parched, drank half the glass. She admitted with a tinge of regret, "I should have been with you at that restaurant. I'm going to skip those dull gatherings from now on. Wherever you go, I'll follow. I can't let you get hurt again." 1

Janet smiled helplessly, took Johanna's arm, and comforted her, "Don't fret. I'm not that delicate. It was just a rare occurrence, and I'm perfectly fine. You can carry on with your plans. Brandon will be with me. Nothing bad will happen."

To divert Johanna's attention, Janet quickly asked, "By the way, how did you come across the video where I was harassed? Only Brandon, Draco, me, and the bodyguards knew about it. How did it end up online?"

Johanna pulled out her phone and showed Janet the video. Looking at it, Janet was surprised to see tens of thousands of comments.

Contrary to what she expected, the video did not portray her as being harassed by a stranger. Instead, it depicted her as arrogant and domineering, pushing a middle-aged man, who was out of work and in debt, to desperation. The man almost knelt down, but she was portrayed as relentless.

Johanna watched Janet's reaction closely and said gently, "Don't worry about it, Janet. Someone is manipulating public opinion online. You're pregnant now. Ignore those malicious comments. I'll have someone handle this immediately."

Janet smiled and responded, "It's okay. I've been through a lot. Public opinion doesn't bother me."

However, she soon discovered that the internet had twisted the reason she had embarrassed the middle -aged man.

The story online claimed that her personal assistant had leaked her design drawing, but her assistant hadn't been affected. Instead, a pregnant designer from her studio and a talent agent without powerful connections had been fired.

The news of the pregnant woman being fired and the unemployed man's public humiliation struck a nerve online. The story spread so rapidly that the public relations team at Larson Group couldn't respond in time. By the time they were ready to act,
the story had already topped the search lists.
