

Married At First Sight Chapter 3747

Married At First Sight Chapter 3747 – The young couple exchanged smiles as they looked at Trenton.

“How much money did you give to your second sister?” Camryn asked gently. She could have been harsh and refused to help Carrie, but she chose not to.

Trenton couldn't bring himself to ignore his sister completely. He wasn't that heartless.

While Carrie hadn't treated him particularly well, she hadn't been terrible to him either. At least she never bullied or hurt him.

However, Carrie had always been awful to Camryn, their oldest sister, showing no respect. Their relationship was strained and distant.

Despite this, after taking control of the family, Camryn didn't seek revenge on Carrie, reminding herself they shared the same mother.

“I... I gave her $50,000,” Trenton admitted. “She said the New Year is coming, and she needed money to buy things for the celebration and get some new clothes.”

He lowered his head, avoiding Camryn's gaze, afraid she would scold him.

Camryn stared at Trenton for a while but didn't say anything. Instead, she took out her phone and showed him a surveillance video of Carrie visiting the flower shop, pretending to be Mrs. Labbe and hiring someone to act on her behalf.

She had saved the video on her phone.

Trenton braced himself for the scolding, but when he looked up, Camryn simply handed him her phone. Confused, he asked, “Sister, what's this?”

“Watch this video,” Camryn replied calmly. “Go sit at the cashier's desk and take your time. Check if the woman in the video is really your second sister. Let me know if you have any questions when you get home tonight.”

Without explaining further, Camryn let Trenton view the footage on his own.

Curious, Trenton said, “Can you send it to my phone? I’ll watch it later.”

As some customers entered the shop, Trenton got up to help, but Callum had already stepped in, so he sat back down.

Camryn forwarded the video, and then went to assist with the customers.

Seeing that he wasn’t needed, Trenton sat at the cashier’s desk and began watching the video. Carrie appeared in it, behaving as usual—targeting Camryn, as if Camryn owed her a huge debt. Her attitude towards Camryn was hostile.

Nothing seemed out of the ordinary at first, but Trenton knew Camryn wouldn’t show him the video without reason. He watched it again and again. Eventually, something clicked—Carrie seemed different, her arrogance seemed forced, as if she was acting, and her usual confidence was missing. Something about her demeanor was off, though he couldn’t quite put his finger on it.

When Camryn finished with the customers, Trenton spoke up. “I think there’s something wrong with the second sister in this video.”

Camryn asked, “Are you sure it’s her? Does the woman next to her look familiar?”

Trenton hesitated. The woman in the video acted like Carrie, but something didn’t seem right. After all, Carrie had just come to the shop, made a scene, and he had given her $50,000. Even though their time together was brief, they were still siblings, and he felt certain he could recognize her.

Married At First Sight Chapter 3748

Married At First Sight Chapter 3748 – When Camryn asked him, Trenton’s heart raced. He wasn’t entirely sure if the woman in the video was really Carrie.

The young lady next to her? He had watched the video several times but hadn’t paid much attention to the lady. All he noticed was that she was young, beautiful, and wearing a lot of jewelry. In the video, Camryn referred to her as Mrs. Labbe, which made Trenton think her husband’s last name must be Labbe.

Mrs. Labbe seemed kind to Camryn and was willing to help her, but Trenton didn't know her. Why was Camryn asking him about her? Should he recognize her?

Trenton watched the video again but still couldn't figure out why Mrs. Labbe was important. He had never heard of her before watching the video.

He glanced at Camryn, looking for answers.

Camryn gently said, "If you can't tell, don't worry about it. She's gotten really good at playing that role, almost as if she's actually that person. I'll explain more when we get home tonight."

Then, Camryn printed out two online orders and started preparing the flower arrangements.

Once she finished, she handed them to Trenton. "It's still early for dinner, and since you're here with nothing to do, can you help me deliver these? The address is written here."

She pointed to a small note attached to the bouquets. "Make sure you collect this note after confirming the delivery, so it doesn't spoil the customer's experience."

Trenton put his phone away, took the flowers, and after reading the address, tucked the notes into his pocket. He grabbed the electric bike keys and said, "I'll deliver them now."

The customer was in an industrial area nearby, so Trenton figured he could easily deliver the flowers by bike.

He placed the bouquets in the front basket of the bike, put on his helmet, and rode off.

"Have you decided to tell Trenton?" Callum asked Camryn gently. "He's still young, and you're not completely sure about what's going on."

Camryn sat at the cashier's counter. Callum poured her a cup of warm water and then went to the small kitchen, retrieving a box of fresh snacks he had brought earlier. He had brought them in the morning so Camryn could eat whenever she had a break, making sure she didn't go hungry.

“Trenton’s an adult and can make his own decisions. If it involves his second sister, he has a right to know. I don’t want him to keep being Carrie’s cash machine.”

Camryn didn’t believe in hiding everything from Trenton just because he was younger. With no elders left to guide them, she was now in charge of the Newman family, and she treated it like her own.

Even though they were from different branches of the family—Trenton from the first house and Camryn from the second—he needed to understand the situation, especially when it came to Carrie. He had to know what was happening to avoid being taken advantage of.

“If Trenton knows the truth, he can help. Carrie doesn’t put her guard up around him,” Camryn added.

Callum nodded in agreement. “You must be hungry too. Have a snack. I made these especially for you this morning.”

Camryn reached for the snack, but then pulled her hand back. “I’ll wash my hands first,” she said.

Before she could go, Callum fed her the snack himself.

She took a bite before heading off to wash her hands.

“It’d be nice if I could just feed you, so you wouldn’t have to do it yourself,” Callum joked, a little disappointed he couldn’t continue feeding her.

Married At First Sight Chapter 3749

Married At First Sight Chapter 3749 – Camryn smiled and said, “You spoil me too much. If you keep doing that, I’ll become lazy. Letting you take care of me all the time will wear you out.”

Callum replied, “I won’t get tired of taking care of you. I like doing it.” He tried to offer her more snacks, but she insisted on feeding herself.

He handed her the snacks instead.

“Trenton may be young, but he’s strong. When our parents went to prison, it was hard for him at first, but he eventually accepted it. As long as he has the right mindset, no matter how difficult things are, he'll come around with time. He won't hold a grudge," Camryn said.

She pushed the snack box towards Callum, encouraging him to eat as well.

"If Trenton didn't have a good outlook, I wouldn't have taken care of him the way I have. Despite everything I went through under his parents' care, I couldn't hate him. He's always respected me as his older sister and stayed positive. That's why I've tried to protect him from their influence. He'll be the head of the family one day, and he's set to inherit a lot. He can't grow up sheltered—he needs to face challenges and become strong enough to handle his responsibilities."

In the past, Camryn had only felt a little affection for Trenton. Her feelings toward her uncle, mother, and sister were different—she resented them deeply for all the pain they caused her. Even now, she was still recovering from the harm her mother inflicted.

What had she done to deserve such treatment? Why did her mother bring her into the world only to mistreat her?

Camryn couldn't believe her mother had wanted to abort her but never had the chance. Instead, her mother gave birth to her and then blamed her for everything.

She even wondered if her family had killed her father after all that happened.

People say children are a piece of their mother's heart, and most mothers love their children. But Camryn's mother was different. If she knew how to love, she wouldn't have spoiled Carrie so much, which ultimately led to Carrie's downfall.

To be honest, if Carrie hadn't caused trouble and angered Zachary, and if everything that followed hadn't happened, Camryn might have had to wait years to reclaim her life and send her mother and uncle to prison.

Callum spoke up, "Your brother, your call. I won't object. If you need help, just let me know. I like Trenton—he's a good brother-in-law. He's smart, sensible, and doesn't get in the way. He's even brave enough to threaten me! He said if I don't treat you well, he's not scared of me being the York family's second young master—he'll fight me to the end and make sure you're never hurt."

Callum accepted Trenton because of how much he cared for Camryn.

Trenton had always seen Camryn as his older sister.

Callum continued, "You're thinking about your mother again, aren't you? Don't let it bother you. Some people just aren't meant to be mothers. She's biased, and nothing you do will ever change that. She's selfish and weak, and she took all her frustrations out on you. Look how she spoiled Carrie, and yet, where did that get Carrie? Your mother doesn't deserve to be called a mother."

Trenton had been sent to boarding school from a young age, spending most of his time away. He had always been independent and didn't follow his parents' lead. He believed in respecting Camryn as his elder sister, and he always did.

Married At First Sight Chapter 3750

Married At First Sight Chapter 3750 – Fortunately, Trenton wasn't negatively influenced by his parents. Otherwise, who knows what kind of person he would have become or what his future would hold.

Camryn quietly finished her dessert, then took a few sips of warm water. She wiped her mouth and hands with a tissue before throwing it away.

She sighed and said, "That's just my mother. I can't help but think about her. Whenever I see other mothers and daughters together, or hear someone call their mom, I think of her."

The pain from her past would take a lifetime to heal.

After another sigh, she continued, "Maybe I'm just not close to my family. My biological father left me early, my mother is worse than a stepmother, and there's barely any bond between me and my siblings."

Callum held her hand.

"Wife, you have me. And my parents treat you like their own daughter. I think they love you more than me at this point."

Camryn let go of her sadness and smiled. "Yes, I've been fortunate. I have a wonderful husband, wise in-laws, and sisters-in-law who treat me like family."

This made up for the lack of affection she had growing up.

She was most grateful to the old lady. If it weren't for her, Callum might never have met or pursued her. There would be no happy life for her now.

If she hadn't married Callum, Camryn wasn't sure how much longer she'd have lived in darkness. Even though her aunt Evelyn had heard of a miracle doctor, there would have been no way to reach him without Callum's help.

Just then, another customer entered the shop, and the couple stopped discussing the heavy topic.

Meanwhile, in Annenburg...

Serenity knew that Zachary was flying to Annenburg that day, and she had told him she was at Jane's parents' home and hadn't yet returned to FC Manor. So, she expected Zachary to arrive at FC Manor that evening.

But unexpectedly, Zachary went straight to Jane's family home after landing.

Serenity didn't know.

Sonny and Titus were playing in the yard, chasing each other, when they saw several cars parked outside the Murphy house.

Sonny spotted one of the York family's bodyguards in the front seat. He recognized them because they were always with his uncle, Zachary. Sonny liked these bodyguards—they were always kind to him.

"Uncle is here!" Sonny stopped running and shouted excitedly.

He ran over to the back seat of the car and stood by the door, waiting for Zachary to step out.

When the door opened and Sonny saw Zachary's familiar face, he jumped up in excitement. "Uncle! Uncle! Did you come to pick up me and Auntie?"

As soon as Zachary stepped out of the car, Sonny hugged his leg and climbed into his arms.

Zachary had to hold Sonny as he got out of the car.

“Sonny, did you miss your uncle?”

Sonny’s excitement made Zachary smile, unable to hide his joy. It was moments like this that made all his love for Sonny worth it.

Sonny nodded eagerly. “I miss you, Uncle. I think about you every day. Are you finished with work? Auntie said we were going back to Titus’s house today and that you’d come in the evening.”

Titus ran over and greeted Zachary politely, “Uncle Zack.”

Zachary smiled and patted his head.

Titus ran back to the yard to tell the others. “I’ll tell my mom and Aunt Seren.”

“I’ll tell them too!” Sonny shouted, squirming to get down from Zachary’s arms and running into the Murphy family’s yard.