Chapter 3761

“Yes, let’s go find Kathryn. She’s back at the company today,” Marco’s younger brothers agreed.

Unable to enter the mansion, the three brothers left, frustrated and defeated. They returned to the company, fuming with anger.

When they reached the Farrell Group, they saw Liberty’s car leaving the building.

They knew Liberty had come to meet Kathryn again.

Marco was so angry that he considered ramming his car into Liberty’s. But two bodyguard cars were escorting Liberty, and with Duncan around, they didn’t dare to take any real action against her.

Even when Clarissa was alive, targeting Liberty wasn’t easy. Later, when Clarissa tried to harm Liberty, it was because she knew Mr. Jimenez was still alive, and she wanted to kill him.

In the end, Clarissa failed, and both she and Mr. Dunn died. With the mother gone, their once-powerful family finally fell apart.

Holden had no real influence, and even when Marco tried to use Holden to pressure Kathryn, it didn’t work. Kathryn didn’t show any respect toward Holden.

Liberty, from her car, noticed Marco and his brothers but didn’t stop or acknowledge them.

Of Clarissa’s four children, the only one Liberty cared for was Kathryn.

She didn’t pay any attention to Holden and his three sons.

Before coming to Jensburg, Liberty’s brother-in-law and aunt had thoroughly investigated Clarissa’s children. They gave Liberty all the information, except some details about Kathryn, to prepare her before arriving in Jensburg.

After Liberty's car drove away, the three brothers parked and entered the company.

Ten minutes later, Kathryn was about to leave her office for a small meeting when the door burst open. Her secretary tried to stop the three brothers, but they pushed past him.

The secretary, looking apologetic, said, "Miss Farrell, Vice President Janzen insisted on seeing you. I couldn't stop them."

Kathryn, with a cold expression, replied, "I see. Head to the meeting room and let Mr. Ye lead the meeting for now. I'll join in a bit."

The secretary nodded and left.

Kathryn turned to the brothers and, without much warmth, said, "Come in."

The three brothers followed her into her office.

Kathryn was still using her old office and hadn't moved into her late mother's. Since she had decided not to take over the family head position, there was no point in relocating.

"Take a seat. Do you want some water?" Kathryn asked. "There are fruits on the coffee table and snacks in the tea room. Pedro got them for me as afternoon tea."

Without waiting for their response, she poured each of them a glass of warm water.

The brothers weren't interested in the fruit or snacks.

Hearing Kathryn mention Pedro, Marco couldn't hold back and asked, "Are you and Pedro in a relationship? He's an orphan without parents. Can't you find anyone else? Why choose him?"

Marco, a man who'd seen many things in life, noticed the way Pedro looked at Kathryn—with eyes full of affection.

Although they respected Pedro's skills and were polite to him, they still looked down on him in their hearts. He wasn't like Mr. Dunn, who was their mother's trusted right-hand man and someone they had grown up with. Mr. Dunn was an elder they respected deeply.

Pedro, on the other hand, was of their generation, even younger than them, and they didn't hold him in the same regard.

Chapter 3762

Marco didn't think much of Pedro. He was fine with Pedro being Kathryn's assistant since it was arranged by their organization, and they couldn't do anything about it. But he didn't like the idea of Kathryn being in a relationship with Pedro.

To him, Pedro wasn't good enough for Kathryn.

As her brother, Marco hoped Kathryn would marry someone powerful, someone they could rely on in the future.

Kathryn sat across from her brothers. She listened to Marco's complaints, then calmly asked, "What's wrong with Pedro? He's better than all of you. Even though he's an orphan, he has the skills to succeed on his own if he wants to.

Why shouldn't I like Pedro? Mom trusted Pedro and even asked him to look out for me. You might doubt my judgment, but do you doubt Mom's? Besides, this is my decision. I've made up my mind—it's Pedro or no one."

Even when Clarissa was alive, Kathryn was hard to control. Now that she was gone, her brothers had even less influence over her.

Kathryn firmly believed that her choice in marriage was hers alone, and no one else had the right to interfere.

"...Alright," Marco finally said. "If Mom approved of him, I won't argue. I just want the best for you. I think you could find someone better than Pedro, even if I introduced you to someone more accomplished."

Kathryn replied, "Pedro is loyal and sincere. Those qualities mean more to me than money or power."

Marco was at a loss for words.

“Kathryn,” Sage added, “We’re not here to meddle in your love life. You’ve always had strong opinions, and even when Mom was alive, she couldn’t change your mind. You never saw us as brothers anyway, so it’s not like we could tell you what to do even if we wanted to.”

He continued, “We came to talk to you about Mom’s inheritance and the Farrell family mansion. That mansion is our home. We were born there, grew up there, and even got married there. But now, you’ve let others take over as if they own the place, and they’re even shutting us out.

Mom’s barely gone, and you’re already letting these people push us aside. We’re your real brothers—your family. Even if we fight, we’re still blood.”

Noel, getting angrier, added to Sage’s words, blaming Kathryn for the situation.

Kathryn didn’t react angrily. She let them say what they needed to say. She understood their frustration, and it was no surprise that they were upset.

After they finished venting, Kathryn calmly stood up, picked up her coffee, and leaned against her desk, sipping it slowly.

Her calm reaction only made her brothers more upset.

When they finally ran out of steam, their mouths dry from all the shouting, they grabbed the glasses of water she’d offered earlier.

“Kathryn, don’t just stand there,” Marco said. “Tell us what you’re planning to do. Are you really going to let everything in the Farrell family slip away to them?”

“The conflicts of the past belong to the past,” Kathryn said. “I took over Mom’s role, not theirs, and I’m not trying to take anything from them. Why should I cling to everything Mom left behind?”

Marco snapped at Kathryn, “Kathryn, have you ever thought about us? We’re your brothers. Even if we didn’t always treat you well before, we never actually did anything harmful to you, did we? Can’t you think about the family bond we share?”

You’re making the Farrell family give up everything. What are we supposed to do now? We have no place in the company. Do you really think we stand a chance if Liberty takes over? She doesn’t need to use force to get rid of us; all she has to do is push us out of the company.

If word gets out, anyone who works with us or does business with us will automatically be seen as her enemy. She has the support of the three major families in Wiltspoon and is close with the Queen family in Jensburg. Who’s going to take the risk of working with your brothers then?

You can take care of yourself, but we aren’t as capable. We have families to support. Our kids need to go to school, which is expensive, and when they grow up, they’ll need money to buy houses and get married.

All of this costs a lot. You’re only worried about your reputation, not about us. What good is a spotless reputation if it doesn’t put food on the table?”

Kathryn calmly sat back down across from her brothers, her expression unchanged. “If there’s more to say, go ahead. I’m listening,” she said.

But in truth, she wouldn’t listen to them. Even when her mother was alive, Kathryn didn’t let anyone sway her choices. Her mother, who truly loved and cared for her, couldn’t change her mind back then, and her father and brothers certainly wouldn’t now.

She never told her brothers that her mother had once hinted that it was up to Kathryn to handle them after her passing. As a mother, she could never be completely harsh with her sons, no matter what they did.

Kathryn wasn’t heartless either. She was still willing to think about their family ties—as long as they didn’t cross the line. But if they pushed too far, she wouldn’t hesitate to stand up to them.

Marco, frustrated, pointed at Kathryn and shouted, “Kathryn, what’s with your attitude? We’ve been talking for your sake, for the sake of all of us, and you act like it doesn’t matter! I know you don’t see us as your brothers, but the Farrell family is what Mom built over decades. It’s her legacy.

As her children, it's our duty to protect everything she left us, not just hand it away to someone else.

You're giving up things that others would fight tooth and nail to get. Are you out of your mind, or are you deliberately trying to make our lives difficult?

Sure, you've got Pedro by your side, and you'll be fine without the Farrell family. You're not married, have no kids, and no real responsibilities, but what about us?

And why haven't you done anything about Audrey? She banned us from coming home, and you said nothing. You know your words carry more weight than hers now. Mom's antiques and jewelry are still at the mansion. Those belong to all of us, not just you. You have to make sure we get our share!"

Despite Marco's angry outburst, Kathryn continued to sip her coffee calmly, letting him rant without reacting.

Her cool demeanor only made Marco and the other brothers even angrier.

Chapter 3764

Sage suddenly stood up, took a few steps toward Kathryn, and tried to slap her, but failed.

Kathryn quickly grabbed Sage's wrist with one hand.

Although she had never trained in martial arts—since her adoptive parents didn't treat her well and wouldn't allow her to—she had learned to defend herself from all the fights she got into when she was bullied. Her quick reflexes came from those experiences.

Then, Kathryn splashed the remaining coffee in her cup onto Sage's face. Sage was caught off guard; he never expected Kathryn to grab his wrist so easily.

Sage knew that Kathryn had no martial arts training and usually relied on bodyguards for protection when she went out. Pedro was always by her side to ensure her safety, and he had even arranged for hidden security to guard her in secret.

In Kathryn's office, with no one else around and even Pedro absent, Sage didn't see Kathryn as a threat. Angry and looking to put her in her place, Sage didn't think about the consequences.

He assumed Kathryn wouldn't retaliate violently because of her strong sense of morality. Besides, Sage was still her brother, and they shared the same parents.

Even though there wasn't much coffee left in Kathryn's cup, it was enough to splash across Sage's face and stain his white suit, making the mess stand out even more.

Kathryn's voice turned cold. "Believe me when I say, if you touch me again, I'll smash your head with a wine glass!"

"You think I'm weak, don't you? I might not be trained to fight, but that doesn't mean I'll lose to you! But before you touch me, think about the consequences—can you handle them?" She let go of Sage's wrist and continued, "Go sit down. You can yell at me all you want, but don't try to hit me. If you do, don't expect me to care about family loyalty."

"We never had much of a bond to begin with," Kathryn said, her gaze shifting to Marco. "You say I don't treat you like brothers, but when have you ever treated me like a sister? Have you ever truly considered me family?"

"We've always just put on an act for Mom's sake. So don't lecture me about family ties or accuse me of not treating you like brothers. Ask yourselves—how have you treated me?"

"Don't think you can boss me around just because you're older. That doesn't work with me. Everything that belonged to the Farrell family belongs to the family—it was Mom who took it, and it was never really hers to begin with, let alone ours. Before she died, she realized her mistake and apologized to our aunt."

"I'm going to return what rightfully belongs to our aunt's descendants. It's my way of making amends on Mom's behalf so she can rest in peace."

"You've been in business for years and have your own real estate and rental properties. Even without the Farrell Group, you can live well off your income as long as you don't mess things up. The rent you earn each month is more than what most people make. What more do you want?"

Kathryn thought her brothers already had a good life and didn't understand why they demanded more.

Chapter 3765

"If Mom hadn't taken everything from our aunts, you wouldn't have all this wealth now. You can do what you want with your personal assets, but when it comes to the rest, I'm in charge, and my decision is final. Even if Mom came back to life, she couldn't change it, so neither can you."

Kathryn looked at her three brothers and said, "I get it. I know you're angry and frustrated, so if you want to vent and shout at me, go ahead. I can take it. I won't hold it against you for that.

But don't even think about going back to the Farrell family mansion to take antiques or valuable items to sell. Those things have been in the family for generations and are meant to stay that way. Nobody has the right to sell them.

Even Mom knew not to touch those things. So don't listen to Dad's schemes about selling them. That would be stealing, and if your cousin calls the police, you'll be in serious trouble.

Don't expect me to bail you out, and you can't rely on Dad either. He's always been more interested in what he could gain from the Farrell family for the Janzen family than anything else."

Kathryn believed that Holden did have some feelings for Clarissa, but their marriage was far from genuine love. It was a deal filled with complications.

Clarissa's heart belonged to someone else, Mr. Jimenez, long before she married Holden. Even after decades together, she never truly loved him. They stayed together mainly to have an heir.

But she never allowed Holden to betray her, and that made his life difficult. Still, it was his choice to marry her, so he had no one to blame. Clarissa didn't force him into it.

Over the years, the Janzen family had benefited greatly from their connection to the Farrell family. Without that support, they might not have been as successful as they are today.

Kathryn saw her parents' marriage as a business deal that just happened to last a lifetime.

“If you want to live a good life, follow my advice: leave the Farrell Group, sell your current house, and move farther away from the power center of the company. The farther, the better.

Don't chase after things that aren't meant for you. With the rent and income from your properties, even without a job, you can still support your family. Appreciate a simple life. Consider the wealth and status of the past few decades as just a dream.

I'm telling you this because we're family. Whether you listen or not is up to you, but I won't say it again.”

She showed her brothers a clear path, and it was up to them to decide whether to take it.

“If you keep to yourselves and don't stir up trouble, Audrey and Liberty won't come after you. You'll have a stable life as long as you don't provoke them. But if you act like Mom and always want more, I won't have to tell you what will happen—it won't end well.”

Clarissa's unwillingness to let go and her desire for more was what led her to take her own life.
