

Married At First Sight Chapter 3831

Chapter 3831

Julian said warmly, “In the future, you should spend more time with Serenity, Jasmine, and Elisa. But don’t take everything Elisa says to heart—just listen.”

Curious, Kiera asked, “What would Miss Stone say to me? Why are you warning me not to believe her?”

Julian let out a small, embarrassed cough as he continued driving. “Well, to help Remy, I had to pretend to pursue Elisa for a while.”

Kiera responded with surprise, “So, I had a rival in love too!”

Julian quickly clarified, “Elisa wasn’t a rival. She didn’t have feelings for me, and her family didn’t either. When Mrs. Stone saw me trying to court Elisa, she immediately approved of Elisa and Remy’s relationship. To her, I was like a disaster waiting to happen—not someone suitable for her precious daughter.”

Amused, Kiera pressed on, “Tell me more—why did you pretend to go after Elisa to help the Fifth Young Master Johnson?”

Julian candidly explained the entire situation, wanting to clear up any potential misunderstandings between them.

Kiera laughed and said, “Your parents must’ve thought you were serious about Elisa. I didn’t expect this from you!”

“Wifey, don’t misunderstand,” Julian said, a bit worried.

Kiera smiled. “I’m not misunderstanding anything. Do you think I’m confused? I’ve met Miss Stone and Young Master Johnson—they’re completely in love with each other. Why would either of them be interested in you?”

Julian nodded, relieved. “Exactly. Elisa never liked me. She had feelings for Zachary for years but gave up after he got married. Elisa can be a bit fiery and has a reputation in our social circle, but her values are strong. Even after Zachary married Serenity in a whirlwind romance, Elisa stood up for him when they had conflicts. She accepted that he was her cousin-in-law and sincerely wished them well. I think that shows a lot of grace.”

“Yes, she seems genuinely happy now,” Kiera added. In her eyes, Remy was a much better match for Elisa than Zachary. Remy’s patience and kindness complemented Elisa’s fiery spirit, unlike the reserved and distant Zachary.

Serenity, after all, was the only one who could warm Zachary’s heart and change him. It was all fate—marriage was a matter of destiny.

As they discussed these love stories, they arrived at the Civil Affairs Bureau. Encouraged by the elders to get an early start, they arrived just as the staff began their workday.

There was no line at the marriage registration office, but the divorce line was already long.

Noticing this, Kiera commented, “When they got married, they must have been full of hope. They just couldn’t manage their marriage well.”

“There are many reasons,” Julian said thoughtfully, holding her hand. “Some marriages fail due to broken trust, infidelity, family conflicts, or, most commonly, issues between mothers-in-law and daughters-in-law. Marriage isn’t just about two people—it’s about two families coming together.” He squeezed her hand gently and added, “But let’s not dwell on them. We’re here to start our journey together, to support each other through everything, and to grow old together.”

Kiera smiled happily and nodded.

They completed the marriage registration process smoothly. After receiving their marriage certificates, Kiera turned to Julian and asked, “Do you mind if I share this with our friends?”

“Of course not. I want to share it too,” Julian replied, smiling as he held up the marriage certificate.

He had finally won her heart. From this moment on, Julian was no longer just Julian—he was a married man.

newlywed couple. She first shared it with her family group chat to inform them of her and Julian's marriage.

Her parents and brothers immediately sent their congratulations in the group.

Next, she posted it to her social media circle, which mostly consisted of family friends and a few old classmates. She received another wave of well-wishes.

Mrs. Caron, Kiera's mother, finally felt a sense of relief. With her daughter now married, she shifted her focus to encouraging her two sons to settle down as well.

Mrs. Caron had always worried that Kiera wouldn't marry, mainly due to Kiera's strong personality and exceptional skills. When the local matchmakers introduced potential suitors, many men hesitated to meet Kiera, fearing they might not match her level of competence. Despite her great achievements, good looks, and respectable family background, Kiera struggled to find a match, leaving Mrs. Caron constantly anxious about her daughter's future.

Kiera, on the other hand, felt frustrated by her mother's relentless pressure, especially since her two brothers were still single. She couldn't understand why her mother targeted only her.

When Julian first visited Kiera's home, Mrs. Caron instantly warmed to him, seeing him as a perfect son-in-law. Over time, her hopes turned into reality, and Julian officially became part of the family.

After seeing Kiera's post, Serenity messaged Liberty to inform her that Julian and Kiera had received their marriage certificate and asked Liberty when she would be returning home.

Liberty was busy at work when she got the message. She responded with a voice note, saying, "The day before the Civil Affairs Bureau closes, Duncan and I will go to finalize the formalities. It won't take long. I'm tied up at work for now, so I'll need you to look after Sonny for a few more days. If he misses his dad, feel free to take him to the Brown family's home for a couple of days to keep them from complaining that I'm keeping him from them."

Liberty felt frustrated by the Browns' complaints. After divorcing Hank, she never spoke ill of him in front of Sonny. Although Hank had been unfaithful and failed as a husband, he had always cared for Sonny and took his role as a father seriously. Since the divorce, he had become even more attentive to his son.

Now, as Liberty prepared to marry Duncan, she hoped Sonny would bond with him like a father figure. However, she had no intention of undermining Hank's role as Sonny's biological father. The Browns were always welcome to see Sonny, and Liberty never interfered with their interactions. She only required that Sonny agreed to stay with them, ensuring he had a say in the matter.

Liberty continued, "Seren, please give my best wishes to Young Master Bucham and Miss Caron. I'll definitely make time to attend their wedding."

"I will, sister. You take care of your work," Serenity replied. "Zachary and I are heading to the Bucham family for dinner. By the way, Sonny didn't want to stay with the Browns for a few days. After we returned from the Johnson family, we ran into Hank at the airport. He was picking up guests and had a brief talk with Sonny, which made Sonny feel down for a bit, but he's okay now."

Not wanting to worry Liberty, Serenity didn't mention what Hank said to Sonny over the phone. She planned to discuss it face-to-face with Liberty when she returned, so Liberty could have a direct conversation with Hank. It was crucial that Sonny's mental and emotional health not be compromised, and Serenity hoped the Browns would stop saying negative things about Liberty and Duncan in front of the child.

The sisters ended their call quickly.

Meanwhile, Hank had a lengthy discussion with his parents when he returned home that evening. Whether it would change their behavior remained to be seen.

Chapter 3833

Hank's parents had always favored Chelsea, a bias that wasn't new and unlikely to change.

Mr. Brown had softened slightly; when he learned that Serenity was the York family's eldest daughter, he regretted agreeing to Hank's marriage to Jessica. After everything that had happened, he believed Liberty was the only one truly suitable for Hank. But it was too late; there was no going back for Hank.

Chelsea returned to her parents' home with Lucas. As she stepped inside, she spoke to her mother, who was relaxing on the sofa watching TV, "Mom, I heard that Liberty and Duncan are getting married soon. The Lewis family is already preparing for the wedding. Once Liberty comes back from Jensburg, she'll probably get a marriage certificate with Duncan."

Mrs. Brown's expression remained cold. "It was bound to happen. Why do you keep bringing her up? Even if she's becoming a part of the wealthy Lewis family, it has nothing to do with us. Hank is still tied to that vile Jessica. I've told him to divorce her, but he won't listen. I don't know what kind of spell she's cast on him. She nearly killed him, yet he refuses to leave her."

Mrs. Brown didn't believe Hank still had any love for Jessica. She felt his resistance to divorce was because he didn't want to give them false hope, making them think they could push him toward Liberty again.

Chelsea continued, "Mom, if Liberty marries into the Lewis family as their fourth daughter-in-law and Sonny lives with her, do you think he'll change his last name to Lewis? If he doesn't, then the Lewis family's wealth won't benefit him. But if he does inherit part of their estate, even if it's only a fraction, it'll be a substantial amount. Sonny is still my nephew and your grandson. If he has money, it could improve our lives. We can't ask Liberty for money ourselves, but Sonny is different. He's family."

"Mom, why don't you bring Sonny to stay with us for a few days? I even brought Lucas along so the two boys can spend time together and bond."

Mrs. Brown stared at her daughter thoughtfully before responding, "Hank had a long talk with me and your father the other night. He told us not to keep scheming around Sonny or trying to use him to get money. He said it could harm Sonny's development, both physically and mentally."

"Sonny is only three or four years old. As his grandmother, I want what's best for him. Hank's words made me think. We missed out on Liberty, and that's our fault. We can't blame anyone else, and we have to live with that. Liberty is fortunate to have found a way into a wealthy family."

It was their family's loss, she thought, as they had driven away a good daughter-in-law, thinking Hank would be happier with Jessica. Who would have guessed it would turn out like this?

“Who could have imagined Serenity’s sudden marriage would be to the eldest son of the York family, worth billions?”

Chelsea pushed further. “But, Mom, we can’t just sit back and do nothing. Liberty is one thing, but Sonny is still part of the Brown family. If we don’t build a bond with him now, he might not consider us family when he grows up. Soon, he’ll be seen as the Lewis family’s grandson. Duncan treats him as his own, and with his wealth, Sonny could inherit a fortune—even if Duncan and Liberty have their own child. This could be our one chance to improve our situation. Don’t you think we should take it?”

Chelsea continued, “Mom, Sonny is your only grandson, while you have three grandchildren. Sonny has a promising future, but his cousins might not be as fortunate. How can you bear to see Sonny living in luxury while his cousins have nothing? Even if my husband and I work our whole lives, we’ll never match the wealth of the Lewis family.”

Chapter 3834

Chelsea silently cursed Hank for failing to understand the situation and not working to repair his relationship with Sonny. Instead, he had even managed to convince his parents to stop siding with her.

When Chelsea thought of Sonny’s bright future—living in a big house, driving luxury cars, inheriting a major company—she couldn’t help but feel bitter. In contrast, her own children might find decent jobs but would likely only have modest, nine-to-five lives with incomes far below what Sonny might casually spend on meals.

Consumed by jealousy, Chelsea felt increasingly desperate to have Lucas and Sonny build a strong brotherly bond.

“Mom, why don’t we try to get custody of Sonny?” she suggested. “If Sonny lives with us, Liberty and Serenity won’t abandon him and will support the Brown family. Sonny would grow closer to us, and when he’s successful, he’d remember the Browns.”

Mrs. Brown motioned for Lucas to go play, and when he had left, she knocked Chelsea on the forehead. Chelsea pulled away, but Mrs. Brown pinched her cheek, scolding her quietly, “Get those ideas out of your head. You’re only thinking about your own kids, using Sonny for their sake. Sonny is your nephew, and you're treating him as a pawn, hoping to drag him down."

She continued, "No wonder Sonny tells Hank he doesn't like his aunt and grandmother. I was influenced by you, talking negatively about Liberty and Duncan in front of Sonny, and now he resents me."

Chelsea defended herself. "What parent doesn't look out for their children? Mom, you're calling me selfish, and I admit it—I want the best for my kids. Is that wrong?"

"You're not wrong to want the best for your kids, but you shouldn't do it by using Sonny," Mrs. Brown replied. "If you want good lives for your children, then raise them well and teach them to be capable. Then they'll have a better future on their own."

Mrs. Brown was firm. Hank had told her that if they kept badmouthing Sonny's family in front of him, he would speak to Liberty about changing Sonny's last name to Lewis. Once that happened, Sonny would belong to the Lewis family, and as long as Hank didn't require Sonny's financial support, no one could force it.

Mrs. Brown feared that if Sonny's surname changed, he'd be lost to them. Hank had also made it clear that Sonny would have the best chance if he stayed with Liberty. If Liberty and Duncan had their own child, Sonny would still be treated well, but Duncan's attention would naturally lean toward his own child.

If Sonny was capable and respectable, Duncan would never treat him poorly. But if the Browns dragged Sonny down, Duncan might cut him off, leaving Sonny with nothing.

In the end, Mrs. Brown, who had helped raise Sonny and loved him dearly, realized what was best. Sonny was her only grandson, and faced with a choice, she ultimately put his future and well-being first.
