

My Accidental Husband is a Billionaire !

#Chapter 554 - Read My Accidental Husband is a Billionaire ! Chapter 554

554 Chapter 553

Lewis immediately followed her in and saw a familiar face.

The person wearing a white lab coat and gold-rimmed glasses was looking at Keira in astonishment.

Lewis had seen that man during his time in Oceanion.

Once, Keira had been brought to the police station due to some misunderstandings and was taken to the hospital in a state of anemia.

In the hospital, it was this man, Matthew, who treated her.

Matthew said she suffered from iron-deficiency anemia, which could lead to dangerous shocks if she fainted from it.

But wasn't he a doctor in Oceanion? Why was he here?

And moreover, why had Keira come to this place?

At the moment, there was a patient in the room, and he was frowning and staring at Keira. "Who are you? What are you doing? You need to wait in line to see a doctor!"

Keira didn't even bother to explain, and Matthew said, "Sorry, I need to discuss some private matters with this young lady..."

The patient immediately became upset. "Why? Doctor, I've been patiently waiting here for you, and this is how you treat me? I'm going to report you to the hospital. I..."

Before he could finish his sentence, a stack of money appeared in front of him.

The patient was slightly taken aback.

Lewis had already stepped forward, stuffing the money into the man's hand. "Could you please step out and wait for a bit?"

His tone was very polite, yet it carried an undeniable air of authority.

The patient clenched his mouth shut and exited the room with the money.

The room finally quieted down.

Lewis looked at Keira, then at Matthew, and went to close the door, only to discover that the door lock had been broken by Keira's kick.

Well...

That showed how irate Keira had been just now; she looked ready to kill someone.

Thinking this, Lewis leaned against the door, blocking the entrance.

Only then did he look at the other two people in the room.

Keira was staring at Matthew, who sighed and asked, "Keira, what brings you here?"

"Stop pretending; I know it was you; you're the one who's been sending me those messages."

Keira cut to the chase.

Matthew paused, his eyes downcast, and a flicker of darkness flashed in his eyes before he looked at her. "Why are you so sure?"

Lewis was also curious.

He wasn't familiar with Matthew and had only met the man during his time in Oceanion when Matthew gave a blood transfusion to Keira. Judging from their interactions, Keira seemed somewhat cold toward him.

Matthew had always maintained a polite distance from Keira, so Lewis hadn't investigated him.

As he was thinking, he heard Keira say, "You want a reason? Fine, I'll give you one.

"I've always been curious why you would show up whenever I'm in danger.

"After I left home, there were several times when I fell ill without realizing it and fainted. It was you who lived across the corridor who saved me.

"The very first time I got my period, I had no experience and fainted from iron-deficiency anemia. You administered iron to me, and I survived.

"You seem to have always known my condition better than I do, so, Matthew, who exactly are you?"

Matthew paused briefly and laughed. "Couldn't I just be a neighborly brother who admires you? Didn't you discover my secret? That's why you kept your distance from me ever since."

His tone carried a tinge of melancholy.

Those words made Lewis suddenly stand upright, looking alarmed.

Keira just laughed. "Yes, I always thought you were a kind-hearted big brother next door. You always lived across from me and took care of me until one day, when I went to your house and discovered the photos of me you had hidden."

Keira lowered her gaze.

She was truly terrified at that time.

Having just moved out from the Olsen family, she was extremely insecure. She was a teenage girl living independently, and Matthew always looked after her for those five years.

She truly regarded Matthew as family, an older brother she cherished; at that time, she and Matthew got along very well.

When she earned money and bought fruit, she always brought some for him.

When she was seventeen, she happened to enter Matthew's room and saw the photos of her that he had hidden...

She was a vibrant young girl, but because of her experiences, she had always pushed people away.

The neighbor next door, whom she had finally accepted, was a doctor. He was gentle and patient, giving her someone to rely on, but she hadn't expected that he would harbor such feelings for her.

At that time, Keira was stunned.

Later, when she realized she didn't have feelings for Matthew and feared causing him trouble, she chose to distance herself, yet each month, she still went to him for her iron treatments.

She had always been his patient.

So, the relationship between Keira and Matthew was very complicated.

Keira couldn't help but laugh. "Sorry, I was too presumptuous. I thought the person in that photo was me, never imagining it could be my sister."

With those words, Matthew's expression suddenly froze.

He tensed his jaw, seemingly still wanting to deny it.

But in the end, he just sighed. "How did you figure it out?"

Keira said, "Because that photo was very strange. The background was a place I didn't recognize at all. At the time, I didn't think much of it, assuming I had inadvertently visited some attic, but after my sister appeared, I developed this suspicion."

She looked at Matthew. "Although I have never been to that place in the background, it should be the Winter Palace, right? My sister has always been in Clance, so it's very normal for her to have visited there. I found her photo album at her house, containing a set taken in the Winter Palace that matches the photo you had. So..."

Keira paused and stared straight at him. "You're my sister's Guardian, aren't you?"

Matthew looked at Keira. He wanted to say something but didn't admit his identity.

Keira continued. "Did my sister know about my mother and me and ask you to protect us?"

Matthew frowned, but when he saw how serious Keira looked, he could only sigh. "Yes. She never had much power. She was low-key and didn't want to compete for anything, so the South family had already given up on her, leaving me to protect you and the lady." Geett the Keira fell silent for a moment, then slowly said, "So, that time out at sea when my sister and I were taken away, was it you who rescued us?"

Matthew clenched his fist. "Yes."

"Why didn't you save my sister?!"

Keira demanded.

Matthew closed his eyes. "By the time I got there, she had already sunk to the bottom of the sea. I had no idea where to look for her. I could only save you."

Keira pressed on, "Then why did you bring me to Clance? You told others I drowned in a swimming pool, and after you gave me an iron injection, you sent me back to the South residence. Why?"

As soon as she said that, Matthew immediately looked at her. "Because I wanted you to avenge your sister!"

Keira was taken aback.

Matthew's had tears in his eyes. "Your sister was so low-profile; she just wanted to live quietly in that little place in the South residence, but those people from the South family never left her alone! It was the people from the South family who killed your sister!"

Looking at the emotionally charged Matthew, Keira slowly walked up to him and patted his shoulder. "Matthew, tell me, what exactly is going on with the South family?"

555 Chapter 554

Matthew turned his head away and wiped the wet corners of his eyes.

Keira didn't rush him and waited patiently for him to calm down.

In fact, Keira suspected that Matthew had a connection with her sister, and it wasn't solely based on a photo she hadn't seen in years...

It was because, after she woke up as Keera, she not only didn't go into shock, but she also didn't show any symptoms of anemia. This indicated that while she was unconscious, someone had been administering iron to her.

And that person could only be Matthew.

Strangers wouldn't understand her condition well enough to execute such a flawless intervention.

It had only been a suspicion until the last time when she thought she saw Matthew at the Clance Hospital. She had someone look into it and discovered that Matthew was, in fact, a doctor there and had been on assignment in Oceanion for the past few years.

Connecting all these dots, Keira came to her conjecture.

After what seemed like an eternity, Matthew finally regained his composure.

He took a deep breath and said, "I don't really know what the deal is with the South family. I grew up in an orphanage. The head of the orphanage told me that I had to work hard and become outstanding if I wanted a family, so I was diligent and became the smartest child in the orphanage. Finally, one day, a luxury car came, and I was taken away.

"I thought I was going to join a happy family, but to my surprise, I was sent overseas to study. They arranged for me to learn many things until I was sent back to the country when I was fourteen, to your sister's side. They told me that my life's mission was to ensure your sister's safety, to be her Guardian, and your sister was my master."

"At that time, Keera was about seven years old, extremely adorable and obedient... She always treated me like an older brother and never like an underling..."

Matthew spoke of Keera with an especially tender tone.

His eyes revealed a sense of nostalgia and affection, clearly showing his deep love for her.

Keira spaced out for a moment.

Keera was indeed a gentle and kind woman, and most men around her seemed to like her.

Like Matias...

With Keera's personality, there wouldn't be many who disliked her.

Keira looked at Matthew and asked, "Then what happened?"

Matthew slowly continued. "Your sister only wanted to keep a low profile and to be abandoned by the South family, so she outright rejected the second mission they assigned. Mary and Ellis never got together, and that's why she chose such a husband."

Keira was confused. "The second mission?"

"Yes, the first mission was to become good friends with Mary. Keera was sent to the same kindergarten by her foster parents when she was little. She was very young, and her parents told her to play with Mary, so she did without making a big deal out of it. But as she grew older, she realized she didn't want to exploit her relationship with Mary, so she took the opportunity to fall out with Mary and gradually faded from Mary's life..."

Matthew smiled bitterly. "She was such a kind girl, not wanting to burden anyone, so she took on everything herself. Including that time on the sea, she chose to save you and gave up on herself."

Keira's eyes gradually moistened.

Her relationship with Keera, whom she had met for the first time only to face life and death separation, wasn't close. She had impersonated Keera partly out of responsibility and partly to save her mother, Jodie South.

But at this moment, listening to Matthew's words, the image of Keera seemed to come alive before her.

Keira was timid and cowardly, yet she could give up the mission issued by the South family for her friend...

She was fearful and panicked, yet for Keira's sake and Jodie South, she could let her Guardian, who would never betray her, protect Keira...

How could she be so foolish?

Keira clenched her fists.

Matthew then continued. "Speaking of which, after your sister found out about her identity, she chose to become a dispensable pawn to protect you, fearing that the South family would discover you... After she was abandoned, it was as if I had been exiled, destined to be just an ordinary doctor, guarding her by her side for the rest of my life. But to protect you and your mother, she sent me to Oceanion..." He lowered his gaze. "Since I was little, I was taught to obey my master's commands, so even if I knew the request was unreasonable and that the one who would get hurt by this request would only be Keira herself, I still had to comply.

"I went to Oceanion, and I met you. I thought you would be as gentle and lovely as your sister, but while your sister was like a rabbit, docile and calm, you were like a cat, always showing sharp claws. You and your sister are completely different people."

His description was quite apt.

But Keira didn't want to hear all this.

She asked, "So, what exactly is the deal with the South family? What do they do? Why are they like this? What exactly is my sister to the South family? And what's with this 'rabbit' code name?"

Seeing her so anxious, Matthew sighed. "Actually, I don't know the answer."

Keira was stunned. "What?"

Matthew gave a wry smile. "I'm just an orphan, so what right do I have to be in touch with the higher-ups of the South family? I don't know what this is all about. All I know is that I receive orders from above, and my mission is to protect the identity of your sister from being discovered and to work together with your sister to complete missions until, finally, we get acknowledged by the South family and can return home."

Keira heard the keywords. "Return home?"

"Yes, return home," Matthew looked at her. Whether it's me, your sister, or even you, don't you feel we're all like orphans stranded outside? We have a home but cannot return. The South family is our home. Only by completing the mission can we return home."

Keira frowned. "Who is your superior?"

"I don't know," Matthew said, "I just receive missions regularly."

Keira scoffed. "So you've never been back to the South family? You don't know where it actually is."

"Correct." Matthew's response was crisp. "Your sister also has never returned. She has always been yearning to go home, so can you help her complete the mission? Marry Scott Martin, even if it's a sham marriage. Just get past this immediate hurdle first. I believe, if the marriage is fake, Mr. Horton will understand!"

"Marriage is sacred and shouldn't be used as a bargaining chip."

Keira said flatly and then looked at him. "However, Matthew, I'm very curious. Since you don't know the South family's location, how come you had a video of the South family threatening my mother?"

At those words, Matthew's pupils constricted.

Keira took a step forward, staring at him. "Can you give me an explanation? Where did you get the video? And what about the photos?"

Matthew looked at her.

Keira then took a step back. "So, I only believe half of what you just said. You must know what the South family is doing and where they are! Work with me, and we can rescue my mother. I will join you in avenging my sister! I believe if my sister were here, she wouldn't just watch my mother fall into their hands. So, tell me, where exactly is the South family?!"