

Chapter 1996 Proposal Plan

Adriana followed Frank all the way to the laboratory. When she witnessed Frank handing over the candle to his colleagues in the laboratory, she couldn't help but feel anxious.

Despite not tampering with the candles, Adriana couldn't shake off her worry. The potential consequences weighed heavily on her mind, given Janet's and Brandon's influential status.

After Frank left, Adriana entered the laboratory. Finding it deserted, she swiftly swapped the candle with her usual one.

That should suffice.

Panicked, Adriana quickly exited the laboratory.

Frank readied the test materials, then re-entered his office, informing Brandon, "We'll have the results shortly."

Brandon acknowledged his words. Noticing Janet's concern, he reassured her, "Don't worry. Let's hope for the best. If there's an issue, we'll catch it early and resolve it."

Janet offered a reassuring smile, feigning calmness as she replied, "No worries. I understand."

Glancing at his watch, Frank noted it was nearly dinner time. He chuckled and addressed Janet and Brandon. "Alright, enough of the affection. Dinner's on me."

After a thirty-minute drive, Frank pulled up outside a renowned restaurant in Barnes.

Adriana followed Frank all the way to the laboratory. When she witnessed Frank handing over the candle to his colleagues in the laboratory, she couldn't help but feel anxious.

Despite not tampering with the candles, Adriana couldn't shake off her worry. The potential consequences weighed heavily on her mind, given Janet's and Brandon's influential status.

After Frank left, Adriana entered the laboratory. Finding it deserted, she swiftly swapped the candle with her usual one.

That should suffice.

Panicked, Adriana quickly exited the laboratory.

Frank readied the test materials, then re-entered his office, informing Brandon, "We'll have the results shortly."

Brandon acknowledged his words. Noticing Janet's concern, he reassured her, "Don't worry. Let's hope for the best. If there's an issue, we'll catch it early and resolve it."

Janet offered a reassuring smile, feigning calmness as she replied, "No worries. I understand."

Glancing at his watch, Frank noted it was nearly dinner time. He chuckled and addressed Janet and Brandon. "Alright, enough of the affection. Dinner's on me."

After a thirty-minute drive, Frank pulled up outside a renowned restaurant in Barnes.

Known for its popularity, securing a table even with a reservation was challenging.

Janet was puzzled by Frank's sudden generosity and inquired, "Frank, what's the occasion for your generosity?"

proposal plan. Janet, could you review it? Is it satisfactory, or would you like any alterations?"

Janet was momentarily taken aback as she held the document, then carefully perused its contents. Once done, she cast a brief glance at Brandon before addressing Frank. "Are you genuinely serious about this? Are you committed to making all of this a reality?"

Frank sipped his coffee before responding with conviction, "Of course. When have I ever been insincere? This is a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity, and I am determined to ensure Elizabeth experiences no dissatisfaction or regret."

Janet genuinely felt happy for Elizabeth, relieved to witness her friend being so deeply valued.

However, the proposal was a personal affair between Frank and Elizabeth, so Janet refrained from offering impulsive advice.

Janet tucked away the folder and returned it to Frank. "I'm unable to offer any meaningful advice at the moment. Perhaps I could gather Elizabeth's thoughts on the matter during a future discussion. After all, every woman has different ideas about marriage proposals. Maybe she would feel uncomfortable with a public proposal."

"What?" Frank was taken aback, having never considered this perspective before.

Janet continued, "There are many factors to consider. You need to take into account the feelings of the person you're proposing to. Ultimately, while proposing is a formal event, it's the sincerity behind it that truly matters. In the end, love is invaluable. I hope you marry her soon."

Janet concluded her words by lifting her coffee cup.

Frank mirrored her gesture, responding with a smile, "Thank you."

Brandon listened in silence, absorbing their discussion.

"You two seem to be having quite the conversation. Did

Chapter 1996 Proposal Plan

 +120 Points at most

you forget there was someone else at the table?" Brandon interrupted, his expression darkening.

Frank and Janet burst into laughter at his remark.

Our ads aim to provide better support for authors.

 I want no ads >