

Chapter 2034 Sonia Was Injured Again

"Sonia!" Janet exclaimed in shock, her hands and feet suddenly going cold.

She rushed forward to check Sonia's injury, her eyes filling with tears.

Suddenly, several waiters rushed in from outside. They quickly assessed the situation and subdued the woman.

Everything happened so suddenly that Janet was a bit shaken.

The waiters moved with such skill and precision that they resembled bodyguards more than waiters.

One of the men in the lead turned to Janet and said, "There is surveillance here, ma'am. Don't worry; we will definitely provide an explanation for this."

Janet couldn't focus on his words. Instead, she asked anxiously, "Is there a medical facility? She needs immediate attention."

Ignoring Sonia, the waiter focused on Janet, his expression one of concern. "Don't worry, ma'am. Take care of yourself and the baby. I'll arrange for medical assistance right away."

With that, he organized for both Janet and Sonia to be taken for treatment.

Janet paused and glanced back, confusion clouding her thoughts.

Why were the waiters so overly concerned about her?

How did they know she was pregnant?

And why were they more focused on her than on Sonia?

Could it have been arranged by Mrs. Lawrence?

That made sense. Mrs. Lawrence must have been worried about her pregnancy and hired bodyguards to protect her.

Janet didn't expect such consideration from Mrs. Lawrence, especially since they were not that close.

Attributing her paranoia to pregnancy hormones, Janet sighed and supported Sonia, her gratitude evident. "Sonia, you've saved me once again. Please, don't leave without saying goodbye this time."

Sonia remained silent, her face tight with pain from her injured arm.

She seemed like someone who kept her emotions in check no matter what.

Was this the demeanor of a seasoned bodyguard?

Janet tightened her hold on Sonia, fearing she might vanish in an instant.

Sonia looked at her with a hint of resignation and reassured her, "I'm not going anywhere. With you gripping me like this, leaving isn't an option. And don't worry—it's just a minor injury."

Janet glanced at Sonia's wound, which was bleeding profusely. How could this be considered a minor injury?

A servant hurried in with a medical kit, which Janet took and prepared to tend to Sonia.

"No, I can do it myself," Sonia protested.

"Absolutely not! And also, don't move," Janet insisted.

She took out some medicine from the kit and gently applied it. Sonia winced as the medicine stung, closing her eyes to endure the pain.

Seeing Sonia's discomfort. Janet asked softly, "Does it hurt a lot? I'll be gentle."

Janet eased up on her actions and then carefully bandaged Sonia's wound with gauze.

Sonia looked at her, a bit distracted, and remarked, "I didn't expect someone of your status to do this."

Janet smiled faintly. "Before returning to the White family, I was raised by an elderly lady. I had to learn to fend for myself. Finding my parents hasn't changed that; I still prefer doing things on my own."

Sonia was slightly taken aback, not expecting such a backstory.

"All done!" Janet declared, admiring the neat butterfly knot she had tied on Sonia's arm.

Just then, her phone began to ring, pulling her attention away.
