

Chapter 2101 Finding The Amulet

A female doctor scanned Lexi's entire body with advanced medical equipment.

Nearby, a male doctor was examining the food items.

Just as he was about to take samples with a syringe from the opened shopping bags, he paused abruptly.

"What's this?"

The male doctor pulled out a amulet from one of the bags and held it up for everyone to see.

Seeing the male doctor frown, Lexi felt her head spin.

In her rush to grab the shopping bags, she had forgotten to put the amulet back in her pocket.

She couldn't tell if the doctor thought it was something suspicious.

So nervous was Lexi, that she couldn't stop her mind from going blank.

The male doctor, hearing no response, turned to Brandon and asked, "Mr. Larson, would you like to come and take a look?"

Brandon inspected the amulet but couldn't see anything unusual from the outside. He walked over to Lexi, holding up the amulet, and questioned her, "What is this?"

Lexi took a deep breath, trying to steady herself. "It's a amulet given to me by my neighbor, Myrna."

The doctor looked at Lexi. "Have you been wearing it all the time?"

"Yes, I have," Lexi replied with a nod.

The male doctor pressed further, "Has it been on you all along? Don't you feel any discomfort while wearing it?"

Lexi thought for a moment before answering, "I've had it on for about two weeks, and I haven't noticed anything unusual or felt any discomfort."

"Lexi, were you wearing this the last time you visited the villa?" Janet asked, a sudden thought striking her. She remembered the strange discomfort she had felt during Lexi's last visit.

Whenever Lexi got close, the feeling intensified. Janet had initially blamed it on Lexi's rapid speech.

But now, thinking back, Janet realized there had been other times when Lexi talked quickly, and she hadn't felt this way. The discomfort had only started during that last visit.

Lexi nodded and replied, "Yes, I was wearing it."

Janet's heart raced. With what she had just thought, a bold guess suddenly popped into her mind.

Perhaps her discomfort was linked to the amulet.

Brandon, also growing suspicious, turned to the male doctor. "Could there be something wrong with this amulet?"

The doctor scrutinized the amulet and replied, "It's difficult to say right now. However, this item seems suspicious. I'll send it to the lab for a thorough analysis."

The male doctor concluded with his brows furrowing as he placed the amulet into a specialized containment device.

While he didn't link the amulet to Janet's symptoms, Lexi was visibly shaken.

She looked around in distress, glancing between the doctors and Janet.

"Janet, I promise I never wanted to harm you or the baby," Lexi said, her voice shaking. "Janet, I swear, if I ever meant to hurt you, then let me get hit by a car the moment I step outside!"

Janet noticed Lexi's distress and gently squeezed her hand, trying to calm her emotions.

"Don't worry. Let's wait for the results."

Despite Janet's attempt at comfort, Lexi remained anxious. She couldn't find solace in Janet's words.

While several doctors and nurses thoroughly searched the villa, the only item deemed suspicious and sent to the hospital for further testing was the amulet.

This made her feel as though she had already been judged guilty.

The thought drained the color from her face, and her lips began to tremble.

She wanted to keep defending herself, but at that moment, she realized it was pointless. The damage she had caused to Janet had already been done.
