Chapter 491 An Additional One Million Troops

“Amazing! How imposing. I’m sure Lord Caspian can defeat the two of them!” Benjamin exclaimed.

Caspian’s strength had already reached the ultimate supreme grandmaster a few years ago. He must have reached greater heights by now.

“Don’t be careless. Our missiles have destroyed the enemy’s front lines. They might choose to retaliate next,” Caspian warned.

“What measures should we take now?” Benjamin asked.

“They won’t give up just like that. If naval warfare doesn’t work, they’ll implement land warfare.

“They might even attack the war zone in South Aridlands. Sound the red alert immediately!” Caspian ordered.

“Yes, sir!” Nodding, Benjamin began to issue the commands.

Just then, an intelligence officer rushed in. “Report, there’s an encrypted call from His Majesty!”

Due to the current circumstances, Balthazar was also using a satellite–encrypted phone to prevent the enemies from eavesdropping.

“What are your orders, Your Majesty?” Caspian asked.

1

“Lord Caspian, Astronia and Vadesia have officially declared war on us. They’ve sent out their Gods of War, Robert Valez and Viktor Obrien.

“Soon after, millions of soldiers will be pressing onto our borders. Are you sure you can handle it?” Balthazar asked.

“Your Majesty, our military force in the war zone of South Aridlands is limited. It’ll be difficult for us to hold the lines against the two countries.

“However, they’ll need to cross other countries to reach Diatoran. This could be an opportunity for us,” Caspian stated honestly.

“At the west, Filren has already engaged in battle with our forces at the borders. We need to be on our guard against Estrya in the east.”

“As of now, I can only order Joseph Welch to redeploy his military troops from the Central Plains to back you up. Is this plan feasible for you?” Balthazar asked.

He respected Caspian’s opinion greatly.

“It’s doable! As long as the troops from the war zone in Central Plains can reinforce me in time, I have the utmost confidence to defeat the enemies’ troops!” Caspian answered firmly.

“Good! I hope you can complete the mission. Astronia and Vadesia will need to pass through Necros to reach Diatoran.

“We can contact Necros to stop them from passing through. We’ll send out additional troops. as well,” Balthazar spoke out.

“I understand, Your Majesty. I’ll find a way so that I won’t fail your expectations,” Caspian declared resolutely.

He thought that was the end of the conversation. However, he didn’t expect Balthazar to voice out his concerns.

“I’m not worried since you’ll be there. However, the situation at West Aridlands is not optimistic. It’s a confrontation, and the soldiers at West Aridlands seem to be in a precarious situation,” Balthazar said worriedly.

“What? What’s Dax Santos doing there? There’s no reason for him to be the Champion of West Aridlands if he can’t defend it!” Caspian exclaimed urgently.

Right after that, Balthazar announced a shocking decision. He planned to oversee the army in West Aridlands to boost the soldiers’ morale.

Caspian was stunned when he heard his decision. It was simply too risky.

After all, Balthazar had an esteemed status. What would happen if an accident occurred?

“Your Majesty “Caspian wanted to persuade Balthazar only to be interrupted by him, There’s no need to say more, Lord Caspian. I’ve made up my mind. I would’ve been able to rest easy if Diatoran had more people like you.

“You’ll be my successor if I encounter any danger. I want you to oversee Diatoran,” Balthazar commanded.

Caspian was shocked. He never thought Balthazar would make such a decision.

However, he wasn’t the least bit interested in the King’s position. Becoming the successor would only mean losing his freedom.

“I know you’re surprised. But Lord Caspian, you’re Diatoran’s only God of War. Only you have the right to the throne. I believe in your capabilities!” Balthazar stated.

“We can discuss this later, Your Majesty. The good always prevails. No danger will befall you,” Caspian said.

“Alright. Prepare for battle. I’ll inform Joseph to send reinforcements to you.” Balthazar hung up when he finished speaking.

Caspian remained in a daze for a few seconds. He never thought the situation would be so grave that Balthazar would have to oversee the army personally.

Diatoran had never faced such a predicament in the past centuries.

West Aridlands was unprepared for the enemy's sudden attack. That was the reason why they suffered such a quick defeat.

"Commander! The enemy has launched dozens of missiles to attack the war zone at South Aridlands!" the deputy reported urgently.

Once again, Caspian focused on the situation as he began to direct the battle.

It was fortunate that Diatoran's National Missile Defense System was very formidable. All the missiles were intercepted the moment they entered the airspace.

There was no one on the streets of Southlake City and Garthram. Everyone had entered the air raid shelters.

A missile attack would be a devastating blow to a city. Thankfully, Diatoran's defense system was still powerful enough to intercept the missiles as soon as they were launched, causing them to explode in mid-air.

Just then, an accident occurred. There was a great explosion inside Southlake Corporation.

With a deafening boom, the company crumbled from the inside. Thick smoke bellowed as the building collapsed within seconds.

The hundred-story-high building was instantly reduced to rubble. The vibrations that followed the building's collapse could be felt within miles away.

Even the people who were hiding underground could sense that something had happened on the surface.

Sylvia, Macy, and the armored battalion had also arrived at the air raid shelter. Their mission was to ensure Willow's safety. They couldn't intervene in other matters for now.

Astronia and Vadesia had officially declared war against Diatoran. For all they knew, there could also be spies around.

It would be troublesome if the enemy decided to target Willow.

Caspian witnessed the moment Southlake Corporation was blown up in South Aridlands' war zone command center, However, there was no change in his expression.

To him, Southlake Corporation was nothing compared to Diatoran.

However, the explosion of the building from within indicated that there were a lot of spies Astronia and Vadesia ceased their air raids after launching hundreds of missiles. They were all intercepted by the system.

"They're utterly despicable, Commander! Who knew they'd have large-scale weapons like this?

"We should use the intercontinental missiles so they can have a taste of their own medicine!" a general exclaimed.

"We can't," Caspian refused.

"Huh? Why not?" the general asked puzzledly.

"No matter what, the civilians are innocent. The war is a military affair. We can't harm the innocent. All we need to do is to drive back the enemy's troops," Caspian ordered.

"Yes, sir!" the general nodded as he replied.

After that, Caspian began to discuss their countermeasures with a few of the higher-ups.

At the same time, the air raid shelter beneath Southlake City was packed with people.

"The latest news reports that Southlake Corporation has been destroyed!" Nicholas laughed. when he saw the notification on his phone.

He initially wanted to pursue Willow. However, he didn't succeed. This caused him to have lingering resentment toward Willow and Caspian.

aturally, he felt somewhat excited when he knew that Southlake Corporation had been reduced to rubble. After all, Southlake Corporation was the largest conglomerate in the entire.

Southlake City.

The people in the shelter started a discussion upon hearing the news.

“How tragic! A large conglomerate, gone just like that?”

“The market value of Southlake Corporation is close to two trillion! They’ve just merged with Morrison Group. It’s truly a pity.”

Chapter 492 On the Brink of a Great War

“Willow has it hard. She’s only been the CEO for a few months and now the entire Southlake Corporation has been reduced to rubble.”

“They used to be so arrogant back when we tried to seek cooperation with their company. They didn’t even take us seriously! Well, she has nothing left now!”

Many sympathized with Willow, while some gloated at her misfortune.

Miranda and the employees of Southlake Corporation were devastated when they learned that the building had turned to ruins.

They might face unemployment even after the war was over. After all, the company was gone.

They were furious as they listened to the mockery from the people around them. Considering the current circumstances, everyone should be united in the face of enemies.

Willow was aware of the brutality of war. However, she simply couldn't accept the fact that the company had been bombed.

Although her tenure as the CEO had been short, she still poured in a lot of effort into the company.

Listening to the sarcastic remarks around her, she felt resigned. However, it couldn't be helped. It was easy for them to be targeted since they were so influential.

"Willow, you rejected me when I proposed to you. Now, look at you. Your company's gone. How do you feel right now?" Nicholas asked mockingly.

Willow simply couldn't be bothered with a pest like him.

Just then, Richard, Alicia, and the Stewarts walked over.

"You were so arrogant back then, Willow. I wonder how you'll still act all high and mighty now that Southlake Corporation has been destroyed!" Richard mocked.

"The CEO of Southlake Corporation who used to have a net value of a few hundred million has nothing left!" Alicia laughed gleefully.

You

"Why did you sever ties with the Stewarts, Willow? At least our company is still intact. I wonder if you regret your decision back then?" Marilyn taunted.

However, Marilyn didn't dare to go overboard. She knew how formidable Caspian was.

Willow was a little surprised. The Stewarts were mocking her the moment they heard the bad news.

"So what if Southlake Corporation has been reduced to rubble? What gave you the right to exist.

“I even have a strategically located villa at Southlake City. No matter how bad it gets, I’m still better off than the Stewarts!” Willow exclaimed indignantly.

Everyone fell silent upon hearing her words. Willow was right. She still had the branch office in Dhord City that was worth hundreds of billions.

She was still the richest person in the entire Southlake City!

“What’s there for you to gloat about? For all we know, even your properties in Dhord City have been ruined. Your villa might’ve been blown apart by the enemies too!” Richard sneered.

“How malicious could you be? Do you think the Hudsons’ properties won’t be destroyed?” Willow retaliated.

“I’m going to rebuild Southlake Corporation immediately when the war ends. I don’t understand what’s there for you to gloat about!” she exclaimed.

Willow’s words shut their mouths again. After all, she was right. She was fully capable of rebuilding the company.

She had billions in fortune. She still had her funds even if the building was gone.

Unable to retaliate further, the rest of them fell silent.

Meanwhile, a few troops had entered Southlake City to prepare for the battle ahead.

The Champion of the Central Plains, Dax, had received Balthazar’s orders to deploy a million soldiers to the south.

Astronia’s and Vadesia’s troops were still a great distance away from Diatoran. They had to cross the sea to arrive.

There was no way Robert and Viktor could reach in such a short amount of time.

This gave Caspian ample amount of time to prepare.

Astronia’s and Vadesia’s use of heavy weapons received opposition from the International Council, which they paid no heed to. They were determined to wage war against Diatoran.

The two countries had long since sought to claim Diatoran's land. They only lacked a reasonable excuse to do so.

However, they also did not dare to act recklessly. They would become public enemies if they incurred international outrage.

Therefore, Astronia, Vadesia, Estrya, and Filren did not dare to use excessively lethal weapons.

2/4

"Commander, the International Council has decided to prohibit the use of intercontinental missiles. This is bad news for us!" Benjamin said worriedly.

They were currently in South Aridlands' command center.

"It's alright. It's good news to the civilians now that none of us can use missiles. At the very least, they won't be displaced. We're changing the battle plan immediately.

"Tell John to retreat and defend Garthram and Southlake City. Find a way to contact Necros; tell them to block Astronia and Vadesia from passing through. Otherwise, they'll be in danger too.

"I'm sure they know that we're all in the same boat," Caspian said indifferently.

Now that they had been banned from using long-range missiles, Diatoran no longer held an advantage in naval warfare.

"Are we going to retreat at such a crucial moment?" Benjamin couldn't understand Caspian's intentions.

"The two countries have come looking for trouble. Their naval vanguards are definitely all elites. Now that we're unable to use missiles, it'll be difficult for us to stop them.

"Therefore, the best way would be for us to engage in close combat with them. However, they'll need to pass through Necros to reach Diatoran. This is a chance for us!" Caspian explained.

Benjamin suddenly understood. “Sir, by that, are you saying that we should cooperate with Necros to intercept them halfway?”

“That’s right. It’s hard for us to unleash our full strength at sea. We have a bigger chance of winning once they’re closer to us,” Caspian nodded as he replied.

“You truly have great foresight. How impressive!” Benjamin exclaimed.

“Alright, I’ll leave the arrangements to you. Make sure to communicate efficiently. The most crucial thing in war is to ensure the messages are delivered timely.

“Only by knowing the enemy’s movements can we adapt accordingly,” Caspian said.

“Yes, sir!” Benjamin nodded as he prepared to issue commands.

He didn’t dare to delay as he ordered John to retreat with the naval troops. They only left behind some submarines and some underwater weapons.

John did not dare to disobey the order as he promptly executed the commands.

The International Council had banned the use of missiles in any country. This rule received the

The citizens in Southlake City no longer needed to worry about air raids as they came out of the air-raid shelter.

Willow, Zoey, Miranda, and the rest of them also left the shelter.

Sylvia and the others were still protecting Willow closely.

The troops began to enter the city. Armored vehicles and tanks rolled in.

Although many of them had seen the vehicles during Caspian’s and Willow’s wedding, it was incomparable to the current scene.

The civilians had never seen such a big occasion before.

“Willow, looking at the current situation, it looks like we’re really going to be at war!” Zoey exclaimed in surprise.

“You’re right. I wonder if Caspian’s among them?” Willow asked worriedly.

“Don’t worry, Willow. Caspian won’t appear here. You should hurry back to the villa,” Sylvia spoke out.

“Huh? How do you know Caspian won’t be dispatched along with the rest of the troops?” Since he was a general officer, Willow assumed that it would be one of his responsibilities to lead the troops to war.

Chapter 493 Inciting Public Outrage

“I was just guessing.” Sylvia smiled awkwardly.

She couldn’t just reveal Caspian’s identity to Willow. As the commander-in-chief, Caspian would be directing the warfare in South Aridlands. There was no way he would be at the front lines.

“Do you know where Caspian is?” Willow asked curiously.

“He should be in South Aridlands. But I’m not sure about his exact whereabouts.” Sylvia simply made up an excuse to dodge the question.

“Well, it’s not like I’ll understand the affairs in the military. Right now, I’m more concerned about the situation at Southlake Corporation. I wonder how things are going there.”

Willow's head was filled with thoughts about the company.

"Willow, the company has turned into ruins. There's nothing much to see there," Sylvia said.

Right now, all she wanted to do was protect Willow, and to do that, she needed to bring Willow to the villa. She would be safer there.

"I only want to take a look at it. Are you going to stop me?" Willow asked with annoyance.

"No," Sylvia replied as she shook her head. There was no way she dared to go against her wishes.

Willow and Zoey got into Sylvia's car shortly after. By the time they arrived, the place was already crowded with onlookers.

The skyscraper had been reduced to rubble. The buildings several miles away had all collapsed. It was a terrible sight to behold.

Willow and Miranda shed tears when they saw the state of the building. They both shared a deep bond with the company.

"Astronia and Vadesia are truly inhumane. To think they'd attack us with missiles!" a person exclaimed.

"I wonder why we didn't use any ..." Another person sighed.

"Diatoran's not as cruel as they are!" someone else said.

"How will we get about in the future now that Southlake Corporation is gone? We've all lost our jobs."

Quite a few of them were discussing the issue. Many of the employees were in dismay.

They had just found their feet in the company only for it to be destroyed. All of them had lost their jobs.

Willow's heart was filled with sorrow. However, she was the CEO of Southlake Corporation. She had to appear strong in moments like this.

"Rest assured, everyone. I'll rebuild the company immediately once the war is over!" Willow shouted.

"That's right! As long as the war ends, we can all work together to rebuild the company. We promise none of you will be laid off," Miranda spoke out. As the vice president, she naturally had the responsibility to placate the employees.

"Who knows when the war will end?" one of the employees asked worriedly.

"Exactly. Astronia and Vadesia have each sent out their God of War and millions of soldiers. It's still unknown whether Diatoran can stop their onslaught..."

"Rest assured, everyone. Diatoran has the strength and the confidence to repel our enemies!" Sylvia shouted.

Hope ignited in their hearts when they saw Sylvia in her military uniform.

The people who had their houses destroyed burst into tears. Many of them expressed their dissatisfaction toward Astronia and Vadesia.

All of a sudden, the crowd became agitated. Several of them even raised banners to express their patriotism. Everyone began to sing the national anthem on the streets.

The relevant departments in Southlake City had to set up temporary shelters for the people due to the large-scale destruction.

Joey took the women back to the city. She didn't expect the situation to take a turn for the worse to the point that it would lead to a war between several countries.

With the city in chaos, she immediately immersed herself in work. As the inspector general, she had to ensure the order of the city.

Willow and Zoey were about to return to the villa under Sylvia's and the others' escort.

Right now, the safest option for them would be to stay at home.

At the same time, the streets were filled with agitated civilians. They were ready to fight until the end with the other countries.

Just then, news of Diatoran's naval forces retreating came back. This caused a wave of panic

"What's going on? Why are our troops retreating?"

+15 BONUS

"What in the world happened? Could it be that our naval forces are afraid of the enemy's troops?"

"Damn it! We should give it our all no matter how mighty the enemy may be!"
The crowd became even more agitated.

Willow and others also heard the news on their way back. They were puzzled.

Wouldn't Diatoran's coastlines fall into the enemy's hands if the naval troops retreated?

Could their military truly be so incapable?

Although Sylvia and Macy had no idea why the troops retreated, they were certain that it was most likely a tactic.

After all, Diatoran's military would never back down.

However, the news had incurred the wrath of the civilians of Southlake City.

"They retreated under the commander's orders. How could they now? Does he even know how to fight?"

"Exactly! He shouldn't be the one issuing orders if he doesn't have the capability!"

“I heard a mighty Champion is serving as the commander. The Champion of East Aridlands, Benjamin Hart, is only the deputy commander.”

“Bullshit. Would a mighty champion make a decision like this? He’s just a coward!”

“Our naval forces retreated without open firing. With the current situation, our coastlines will fall into the enemy’s hands soon. When that happens, Southlake City will be in danger!”

“Not only that, even the entire country might be in danger!”

“That’s right. Filren’s attacking from the west while Estrya’s in the east. Moreover, Astronia and Vadesia are in the south. Diatoran is completely surrounded by these four countries!”

“I’ll curse the commander to death if I ever find out who he is!”

Furious, the civilians of the city had a low regard for the commander. Some choose to pack up and leave the city due to the grim situation.

Willow didn’t get it. Why did the naval forces decide to retreat at this critical moment? Was the commander about to give up on resisting?

“Sylvia, do you know who that coward of a commander is?” Willow asked.

3/4

Sylvia felt embarrassed. Did Willow just call Caspian a coward?

It looked like the news of the naval forces retreating had caused a lot of dissatisfaction among the people.

“You’ve misunderstood, Willow. The commander is definitely not a coward. This must be a part of his plan,” Sylvia explained hurriedly.

“Why did he ask the naval troops to retreat if he’s not a coward? What about the safety of Southlake City?” Willow asked.

“We won’t be able to figure out the commander’s thoughts. However, Diatoran’s troops. will never back down.” Sylvia had been by Caspian’s side for many years. She knew some of the tactics he would use..

He was going to surround the enemy's forces under the pretense of retreating to wipe them out.

However, Sylvia couldn't tell Willow that. She had to prevent the secret from leaking out.

"Do you know who the commander is? If not, why are you speaking up for him?" Willow asked curiously.

Sylvia nodded her head. "You're right. I know him."

"Then tell me, what's his name?" Willow asked.

"I can't tell you that, Willow. But sooner or later, you'll find out." Sylvia didn't dare to reveal Caspian's identity.

Chapter 494 Attacked on the Way Back

Caspian's actions incited public outrage. There were many who were openly cursing him on the streets.

Willow would be upset if she knew that the commander was her husband. Besides, there was no way they could reveal Caspian's identity when the civilians of Southlake City were so agitated.

"How would I possibly know about the affairs in the military?" Willow asked puzzledly.

She would never imagine that the commander who was being hurled with insults by tens of thousands of people was her own husband.

“The commander’s identity will definitely be revealed once the war ends,” Sylvia explained.

“Alright then. Can you tell me about Caspian’s current situation? I’m more worried about him,” Willow questioned.

“Rest assured, Willow. Caspian has been through hundreds of battles. He’ll definitely be safe,” Sylvia replied reassuringly.

At the same time, the military troops in Southlake City had begun to station themselves at the coastlines.

The senior general, John Anderson, had led the withdrawal of the naval troops. The cities by the coastlines would become a strategic location for the upcoming battle.

The first commander to be stationed at Southlake City was Desmond Patten. He was a renowned general officer in South Aridlands. This time, Caspian appointed him as the commander of the vanguards.

Desmond had once wiped out tens of thousands of the enemy’s forces with only a thousand soldiers. That battle earned him great fame.

Once he stepped foot into the city, he immediately went to the front lines. Desmond began to command troops at the coastline that was a few hundred miles long.

At the same time, the Champion of Central Plains, Joseph Welch, had also arrived with reinforcements.

A portion of the soldiers were air–dropped directly into the city. There were even fighter jets that were in charge of transporting several thousand soldiers to Southlake City.

Time was of the essence. Diatoran had mobilized all resources to be used in combat.

The entire city was enveloped in a tense atmosphere. The streets were filled with the latest war.

1/4

However, they were all furious upon hearing the retreatment of the naval forces.

As they began to hurl insults at the commander, even some of the media were stepping out to condemn Caspian.

“Commander, the retreat of the naval forces has caused the discontent of the public. Many of them are berating you. Should we intervene in the matter?” Benjamin asked.

They were currently in South Aridlands’ command center.

“Looks like they don’t know that I’m the commander of the war,” Caspian stated.

“Yes, sir. Although the citizens have no idea, the enemy’s forces are well aware of your identity. As the war progresses, sooner or later, your identity will be exposed ...” Benjamin replied worriedly.

“It’s fine. I don’t care about such things. Who’s the one commanding the battle—me or them?” Caspian asked disdainfully.

As the Diatoran God of War, it would be too pathetic if everyone could figure out what he was thinking.

“I understand. It’s fine as long as you don’t take it to heart.” Benjamin nodded.

“As long as we achieve victory, it’s fine if they curse at me. I’m just worried whether the enemy will fall into our trap. Will they attack from Southlake City’s coastline?” Caspian continued.

“Southlake City and Gartham are the closest cities to the sea. But in comparison, Southlake City is more suitable for them to land. They’ll definitely choose Southlake City!” Benjamin said.

Caspian was in deep thought. The matter wasn’t as simple as it seemed. The scale of the operation was unprecedented.

The enemy’s generals weren’t easy to deal with.

“Robert and Viktor are renowned Gods of War of their respective countries. They know who I am, so they’ll definitely spend time studying me. For all we know, they might have already seen through our plans.

“We have to be prepared/We can’t put all our eggs in one basket. We need to grasp their latest intelligence so that we can adapt accordingly,” Caspian warned.

“Yes! I’ll make sure the intelligence department gathers the intelligence we need. I’ll Benjamin stated.

As the war broke out, Caspian became increasingly worried for Willow’s safety. He decided to give Sylvia a call.

Sylvia, Macy, and the others were preparing to escort Willow back to the villa. However, they stopped on their way back to look at the civilians who had crowded the streets of the city.

Grouping together, the citizens fervently point out the mistakes in the commander’s military tactics.

It was then that Sylvia noticed Caspian’s call. However, she did not pick up for fear of revealing any secrets. After all, there were eyes all over the place.

“Macy, protect Willow. I need to pick up a call,” Sylvia commanded.

“Yes.” Macy nodded her head. She knew it was an important call.

“Ms. Frost, is it a call from my husband?” Willow asked.

“No, it’s not,” Sylvia lied. She had a feeling that Caspian had something important to instruct her.

Nodding her head, Willow did not ask further.

Moving to a secluded corner, Sylvia picked up the call. “What are your orders, Caspian?” she asked.

“It’s nothing much. I just want you to protect Willow,” Caspian replied.

“Caspian, would it be possible to ask someone else to be in charge of Willow’s safety?” Sylvia asked cautiously.

“Why’s that?” he questioned.

“It’s nothing. I’m just a little anxious. The other generals are all preparing to charge into the battle. I also want to be on the battlefield,” Sylvia answered.

She wouldn’t mind being Willow’s bodyguard if the world was at peace. But with the war looming ahead, she felt a little wronged for a general officer like her to be a mere bodyguard.

“Your current mission is to protect Willow. This is an order. I’ll let you have some fun when the time is right,” Caspian instructed.

“The enemy might send assassins to harm Willow at any time. I’ll be under their control if Willow gets ca captured. So, the mission you’re carrying out now is equally as important,” he continued.

“I understand, but why don’t you bring Willow to South Aridlands? She’ll definitely be safe

Caspian was getting a little impatient. “You talk too much, Sylvia. I have my own plans. All you need to do is to follow my orders. I’ll find someone else to replace you if you don’t want to do it,” he answered.

Caspian had his hands full with military affairs. He didn't want to be distracted by anything else.

"No, I wouldn't dare. I'll definitely protect Willow," Sylvia replied.

Soon after, Caspian hung up. Sylvia immediately returned to Willow's side.

"Let's hurry up and return, Willow. It's not safe out here," Sylvia urged. The longer they were out in the open, the more danger they would be in.

"Alright, let's go back." Willow knew how serious the current situation was. Not only that, she was also Caspian's wife.

It was inevitable that they might be targeted by the enemy given her special identity. She was also afraid that any unexpected incidents might occur. Therefore, it would be better for her to return to the villa first.

Just then, a group of people appeared in front of them. Brandishing their weapons, they aimed for Willow.

"Protect the God of War's wife!" Sylvia shouted upon seeing them.

Chapter 495 Impersonating the God of War's Wife

Upon hearing Sylvia's warning, the armored battalion immediately stood in front of Willow.

Brandishing their weapons, they were ready to sacrifice themselves to protect Lord Caspian's wife.

Macy had been keeping watch of their surroundings. She fired the first shot the moment she saw the attackers. As a seasoned soldier, her keen perception and insight were far from ordinary.

The sound of gunshots echoed in the streets.

Scared stiff, Willow and Zoey quickly crouched down. The civilians on the streets ran away in terror.

Sylvia immediately entered combat mode. As a general officer, she showed no signs of panic in the face of danger. With her precise marksmanship, each of her bullets found its mark, killing the attackers.

With their fast reaction, the armored soldiers were also not to be underestimated. However, a few of them suffered severe gunshot wounds to protect Willow.

After engaging in a few minutes of fierce battle, the attackers were wiped out.

Several of the armored soldiers had collapsed on the ground. They had all suffered severe wounds to protect Willow. Tears streamed down Willow's face when she saw that the soldiers had taken multiple bullets just to protect her.

Some of the soldiers rushed over when they noticed the situation. Even Joey, who had been maintaining public order, came over with the inspectors.

"What happened?" one of the team leaders asked.

"These are all spies of the enemy. They came to assassinate me," Sylvia said. The reason she said that was to protect Willow.

The fewer people who knew Willow was Caspian's wife, the better.

"Who are you? Why would they assassinate you?" the team leader asked. Although he was also a soldier from South Aridlands, he had never seen Sylvia before.

"I'm a general officer, Sylvia Frost!" She took out her military ID.

"General Frost!" The team leader stood straight and saluted Sylvia the moment he saw her ID.

"Send these people to the hospital for treatment immediately," Sylvia ordered. The armored soldiers were badly wounded and needed immediate treatment.

"Yes!" he replied. The team leader instructed his subordinates to send the soldiers to the hospital in their car. Sylvia also sent a few people to follow them.

"Are you alright, General Frost?" Joey asked concernedly. She had just rushed over.

"I'm alright. Thank you for your concern," she replied.

"It's the least I can do. Please be careful, General Frost," Joey said.

"It's just some spies. There's nothing to fear," Sylvia said indifferently. "Could you do me a favor, Ms. Sanders? Please clean up the scene."

"Huh?"

Joey was rendered speechless by Sylvia's words. The inspector general was just about to become a professional mortician.

She had hardly done any real work since she was appointed.

"Everyone, clean up the scene immediately. Don't scare the civilians," Joey ordered. Anyway, this was something she had to do.

Joey and the others left after the situation had been handled.

"Don't be sad, Willow. Our mission is to ensure your safety. Even I would sacrifice my life to protect you," Sylvia comforted Willow after seeing her cry.

"But I'm just an ordinary citizen. Even if I'm Caspian's wife, surely there's no need for sacrifice your life to ensure my safety..." Willow wept.

“That...” Sylvia didn’t know how to answer her when she couldn’t reveal the details. “How could you be an ordinary person, Willow?”

“That’s right, didn’t you say something about protecting the God of War’s wife? Am I the person you were referring to?” Willow suddenly remembered Willow shouting that just now.

Sylvia didn’t know what to say. She didn’t dare to reveal Caspian’s identity.

“Right, I think I heard that too. Who’s the God of War’s wife? Surely it can’t be Willow?” Zoey cut in.

Now, Sylvia was completely at a loss. She had made a slip of the tongue because of the urgent situation. Now, she didn’t know how to make up an excuse.

Sylvia glanced helplessly at Macy, hoping she could help.

Macy immediately came forward upon seeing the situation. “Truth be told, I’m the God of War’s wife,” she said shyly.

Everyone looked at her with disbelief the moment her words fell. Even Sylvia and the armored battalion were stunned as they gazed at Macy.

Macy was truly bold. To think she would declare to be the God of War’s wife...

Macy’s face reddened. She had no choice. There was no way she would impersonate the God of War’s wife if it wasn’t to help Sylvia out!

After all, Willow and the others had no idea who the God of War was. They wouldn’t suspect a thing even if she sprouted nonsense.

“What? You’re not tricking me, are you, Macy? If that’s the case, then why did everyone rush to protect me just now? They should’ve gone to protect you if you’re the God of War’s wife, right?” Willow asked puzzledly.

“Exactly. What’s going on? I saw that too. If you’re really the God of War’s wife, why are you hiding your identity and pretending to be Willow’s bodyguard?” Zoey voiced her doubts.

This made Macy even more embarrassed. Her excuse was filled with loopholes.

“As you can see, I’m an expert in martial arts. How could the God of War’s wife be an ordinary person?”

“I don’t need their protection. I’m hiding my identity so that no one can find me,” Macy began to talk nonsense.

“You’re not tricking me, are you? Who’s your husband? Why don’t any of us know that you’re married?” Willow asked again.

“I’m afraid I can’t tell you that,” Macy replied. She was afraid that she would give herself away if she said any more.

“General Frost, I need you to call Avon immediately and get him to treat the armored soldiers. Make sure he saves their lives,” Macy said commandingly to change the subject.

Sylvia was somewhat speechless. Although Macy was appointed as the general of the intelligence department, her rank was not higher than Sylvia’s.

To think Macy dared to order her around...

But this was the only way to dispel Willow’s suspicions. so Sylvia decided to overlook it.

Those soldiers were all severely wounded and needed immediate treatment. Avon would definitely be able to save them with his medical skills.

“Yes!” Sylvia gave Avon a call without hesitation.

“Sylvia, start the car immediately and take us away from here.” Feeling the power she held as the so-called God of War’s wife, Macy issued another order to Sylvia.

“Yes!” Sylvia didn’t dare to ignore Macy’s orders. Right now, she had to cooperate with Macy’s act as much as possible.

Chapter 496 A Woman's Sixth Sense

Macy had always been the one to drive Sylvia around, but this time, she was pretending to be the wife of the God of War. She even ordered Sylvia to drive her.

The armored soldiers could not hold back from laughing when they saw Macy giving orders to Sylvia.

"Hurry up and get in the car. I'll send both of you back," Macy said to Willow and Zoey.

Both Willow and Zoey followed without hesitation.

Sylvia then drove the car to Riverside Villa.

The armored battalion also got into a car of their own and escorted Sylvia's car.

"Are you really the God of War's wife?" Willow asked again when she was inside the car.

Something did not feel right, but she could not put it into words.

"Why? Don't I look like her?" Macy asked. She had already immersed herself in the role of the God of War's wife.

In fact, when she first met Caspian, she felt that she and Caspian were a match made in heaven.

"Are you tricking us, Macy? I don't think you look like the God of War's wife," Zoey asked.

"Why? Are you doubting me as well?" Macy asked. She was getting annoyed that neither of them believed her.

"Aren't you Caspian's subordinate? If you're working for him, how did you suddenly become the God of War's wife?" Zoey asked.

Macy was momentarily stunned but fortunately for her, she was quick-witted.

“I really am the God of War’s wife even though my position may not be as high as Caspian’s. Moreover, he made many contributions during wars. So, even though he’s only a general officer, his position is higher than that of an ordinary officer.

“It’s also true that I’m his subordinate.” Macy made up a random reason.

If they kept questioning her, she would be exposed.

Sylvia smirked. She was in the driver’s seat as she listened to Macy with her blatant lies.

In less than half an hour, Sylvia had arrived at Riverside Villa.

When Willow and Zoey were about to enter the villa, Macy blurted, “Stop! Don’t enter the villa!

Both of them were momentarily stunned. They looked at Macy.

Even though she was the God of War’s wife, she had no authority to interfere with their plans.

“Something’s not right about the villa. Look at the lawn. It looks like someone walked on it,” Macy said with her brows knitted together.

Sylvia and the armored battalion instantly became vigilant after hearing what Macy said.

They took their weapons out, getting themselves ready for any potential ambush.

Macy had been fighting in South Aridlands. She had good insight as well. She would not have said such things lightly.

“The villa seems fine. What could be wrong?” Willow was momentarily stunned. She felt slightly uneasy. She did not see anything unusual about the lawn as well.

Having just experienced an assassination, everywhere felt unsafe to her.

Sylvia could not afford to be careless either. She suddenly thought of the fact that she had brought everyone with her when they left the villa. Nobody had stayed behind to do patrolling.

There was a possibility that their enemy might have sneaked in during that period!

“Protect Willow and retreat!” Sylvia ordered.

Macy escorted Willow and Zoey into the car.

Sylvia started the car again and began to reverse.

The armored battalion did the same as well.

When they had retreated about a hundred meters away, Sylvia asked Macy, “Tell going on?” She also had the feeling that something was not quite right.

“A woman’s sixth sense is often very accurate,” Macy said.

“But we’re women too. Why didn’t we notice anything?” Zoey asked in a confused tone.

“Macy, go and take a look. I’ll be here protecting Willow,” Sylvia instructed.

“Got it!” Macy nodded.

Willow felt extremely moved when she saw that Macy was personally going over to investigate. Not only was she the God of War’s wife, but she was also such an excellent warrior!

Macy led ten armored soldiers with her into the villa. The others stayed back to protect Willow.

After all, Willow was the real wife of the God of War.

Macy had faith that she could deal with any trouble that arose.

The armored battalion surrounded Willow's car. They were watching the surroundings with hawk eyes.

Willow became nervous when she saw that the situation had gotten serious.

She was also questioning why they would protect her when she was just the wife of a general officer instead of protecting the wife of the God of War.

Macy and the ten armored soldiers had already reached the entrance to the villa.

They walked into the villa with stealth.

The surroundings were silent, and the atmosphere was out of the ordinary.

All of them formed a circle and walked into the villa in this formation so that they could watch out for each other..

Something happened as soon as they entered the hall.

At that moment, many men clad in black rushed out from all directions inside the villa's hall. There were even people observing from the second floor.

They raised their weapons and pointed them at Macy. They opened fire immediately.

Macy was right! There were secret agents lying in ambush in the villa!

Fortunately, Macy and the armored soldiers came prepared. They were constantly in a vigilant mode.

They reacted quickly and were able to fight back instantly.

Gunshots could be heard throughout the entire villa.

Instantly, there was a hail of gunfire and bullets. The entire villa was turned into a battlefield.

Macy and the armored soldiers had gone through rigorous training. They were able to find a makeshift bunker and organized a counter-attack immediately. Their opponent was no match for them at all.

Nevertheless, they were still outnumbered. Many men clad in black appeared on the second floor. They could clearly see everything that was happening on the first floor.

Macy and the armored soldiers were completely exposed and vulnerable to the enemies on the second floor. This was a very dangerous situation for them. If they were not careful, they might get shot.

Willow, Sylvia, and the others heard the gunshots coming from the villa. They became anxious as well.

BONUS

Sylvia acknowledged Macy's skills, but their opponents had come well-prepared. Judging from the gunshots, there seemed to be many people on the opponents' side. This was very disadvantageous to Macy and her team.

"Sylvia, something's happening inside the villa! Hurry up and go help them!" Willow shouted as she was worried.

"Got it!" Sylvia nodded. Since the opponents had been lurking within the villa, the area outside should be safe.

Without any hesitation, she immediately got out of the car and said to some of the armored soldiers, "All of you here, I need you to protect the God of War's wife."

"Got it!" They nodded.

Then, Sylvia and 20 armored soldiers rushed inside.

Willow was taken aback when she heard Sylvia mention 'the God of War's wife'."

Wasn't the God of War's wife Macy?

Zoey and Willow looked at each other.

"Willow, maybe you're the God of War's wife! I had the feeling that Macy was being odd!" Zoey suddenly exclaimed.

"What? How's that possible?" Willow asked, visibly surprised.

How could Caspian be the God of War?

"Who else if it isn't you? It's definitely not me!" Zoey said.

"Caspian told me that he's a general officer, not the God of War," Willow asked.

Zoey began to ponder. Suddenly, she remembered something that had happened before.

She said in a surprised tone, "That's right! Back then when we came back from Dragon's Hill, I think he told us that he was the Diatoran God of War! But both of us said that he was just bluffing. Eventually, he changed his claim and said that he was a general officer!"

Chapter 497 Time Bomb

Willow seemed to recall that Caspian had, in fact, told her that before.

However, back then, both Zoey and her thought that Caspian was just messing with them.

She would never have imagined that someone of such prestige would be interested in her.

Could it be that Caspian was really the Diatoran God of War?

"But if he's the Diatoran God of War, why would he want to be with me?" Willow was dubious.

"It's the power of love!" Zoey said excitedly.

"If he really is the Diatoran God of War, how could he have accepted being wronged when we were getting mistreated at the Stewarts' residence?" Willow remained doubtful.

"It must be because of love. If he really isn't the Diatoran God of War, there wouldn't have been such a grand wedding procession with the military involved. Ordinary people wouldn't have been able to do that.

“Even the senior general, John Anderson, attended the wedding personally. Why would such a high-ranking officer attend a general officer’s wedding ceremony?” Zoey explained.

Willow nodded unknowingly. Zoey’s words were starting to make sense.

“Remember that incident at the Cliff of Death where the military unit was dispatched? Only the Diatoran God of War can mobilize so many soldiers and horses,” Zoey said as she recalled another incident.

The more Zoey spoke, the more Willow was convinced that Caspian was the Diatoran God of War. Suddenly, everything that did not make sense was starting to fall into place.

“I’m going to have to stop you for a while, Zoey. I’m getting dizzy,” Willow’s chest rose and fell. If her husband was really the Diatoran God of War, it meant that Caspian held one of the highest positions where he was second only to the King.

“I’m so envious, Willow! I can’t believe you’re the wife of the Diatoran God of War!” Zoey said emotionally.

Meanwhile, Macy and the others were in the middle of a fierce battle.

Three armored soldiers had been shot.

“Take them into the room in case they get shot again!” Macy ordered.

The situation was not favorable to them.

1/4

All the enemies on the first floor had already been eliminated. They had to move on to the second floor to defeat the remaining enemies.

The armored soldiers heeded Macy’s order and began transporting their wounded teammates into the room.

Macy covered them as they hauled the injured soldiers into the room.

Then, she sprinted up the stairs. She was going to eliminate the enemies on the second floor.

It was fortunate that Macy reacted swiftly. Otherwise, they would have died the moment they entered the villa.

It was at this time that Sylvia rushed inside the villa with a few other armored soldiers.

As soon as they entered, they heard gunshots coming from the second floor.

Sylvia immediately led the men up the stairs.

More enemies were hidden on the second floor, and Macy's gun was out of ammunition.

It was at that critical moment when Sylvia suddenly showed up.

Gunshots were accompanied by screams that came and went. Sylvia and her team opened fire immediately, defeating the enemies victoriously.

With everyone working together, all the enemies in the villa were eliminated.

Blood filled the air of the entire villa.

They counted the numbers of the enemies. There were around 70 to 80 of them.

"Thank god for your sixth sense, Macy. Otherwise, it would've been really dangerous," Sylvia said.

"That's true. So, how are you going to thank me?" Macy said smugly.

"In your dreams, Macy. We haven't even talked about how you impersonated the God of War's wife. You're really fearless, aren't you?" Sylvia chided her.

"If you hadn't given it away, you think I'd have to do the impersonation?" Macy argued, not backing down.

"We'll see how Caspian deals with you when he returns," Sylvia countered.

Then, everyone worked together to help carry the injured armored soldiers out of the villa.

In order to protect Willow, dozens of people were seriously injured.

It was at that moment when an enemy lying on the ground gathered his final strength to take a device out of his pocket. He pressed a button on it.

2/4

Suddenly, beeping sounds could be heard.

“Shit! There’s a time bomb!” Macy was the first to hear the beeping sound.

“Where is it?” Sylvia asked urgently.

“On the second floor!” Macy said before sprinting up the stairs without a moment’s hesitation.

“I need some of you to follow me upstairs!” Sylvia ordered.

If the bomb went off in the villa, there would be many casualties.

The injured armored soldiers had not left the villa.

Macy followed the beeping sound and was guided into Caspian and Willow’s bedroom.

In a short amount of time, she managed to locate the bomb.

The bomb had been hidden inside the closet. When she opened the door to the closet, there were only 20 seconds left on the countdown timer.

It would be impossible to defuse the bomb within that short period of time.

With such a short countdown, she realized that the enemy troops had no intention of leaving at all!

“Everyone, retreat! It’ll explode in less than 20 seconds!” Macy shouted loudly.

She picked up the bomb and jumped out of the window. She wanted to get the bomb as far away as possible.

The armored soldiers were all shocked to see what Macy was doing.

With the bomb in her arms, she was in grave danger.

Nobody dared to follow her. They could only rush back downstairs.

Sylvia became nervous as well. She hoped that Macy could make it out alive.

Willow and Zoey were also shocked to see Macy jump out from the window of the second floor. They still had no idea what was going on.

As soon as she landed, she sprinted toward the riverside behind the villa like a mad person.

Willow was not sure either. They could not see that she was carrying a bomb in her hands.

“Let’s head into the villa and see what’s going on,” Willow said in a concerned tone.

+15 BONUS

As they were getting ready to get out of the car, Macy had already reached the riverside.

A loud bang rattled the entire place.

The blast made a huge splash over ten meters high on the surface of the river.

Both Willow and Zoey were startled by the loud bang.

When the armored soldiers heard the explosion, they became disheartened.

It would have been impossible for Macy to distance herself from the bomb within that short time frame.

She only had less than 20 seconds left. There was no chance of survival.

Sylvia and the others ran toward the riverside behind the villa.

“What happened?” Zoey asked in a daze.

“Did Macy run out with a bomb in her hands?” Willow seemed to have figured it out.

“What? Does that mean she might have gotten killed?” Zoey exclaimed.

“I’m not sure either. Let’s go and have a look!” Willow was extremely nervous.

If Macy died, she would have to live with this guilt for the rest of her life.

If it were not for Macy, the person killed by the bomb would have been her.

When everyone gathered by the riverside, nobody saw any traces of her.

“Macy!”

“Captain Osborne!” Sylvia and the armored soldiers yelled as they searched for her. Tears had welled up in their eyes.

Could it be that Macy had really died?

Chapter 498 I’ve Lost My Memories

When everybody had assumed the worst and was heartbroken, Willow and Zoey found Macy under a big tree.

It seemed like the impact of the explosion had propelled her far away.

“I found Macy!” Willow shouted loudly.

Sylvia and the others rushed over when they heard Willow.

They helped Macy get up from the ground.

It seemed like there were no external injuries on her. However, she had passed out.

“Macy! Macy! Are you okay? Answer me!” Sylvia shouted.

The armored soldiers were all nervous.

But no matter how everyone yelled, there was no response from Macy.

From the names they called out, Willow and Zoey confirmed that Macy was not the God of War’s wife.

The armored soldiers seemed to be addressing her as Captain.

Nevertheless, everyone was more concerned about Macy’s well-being. Whether she was the God of War’s wife was no longer important.

With trembling hands, Sylvia held her finger up to Macy’s nose. There were no signs of breathing.

“Macy! Please don’t scare me! How could you die?” Sylvia burst into tears.

Even though they occasionally had differing opinions, they had a pretty good relationship with one another.

“There are no wounds on her, so how could ...” Willow covered her mouth as her eyes began to water.

If it were not for her, Macy would never have died.

“Maybe she suffered internal injuries due to the impact from the explosion,” an armored soldier said as he choked on his sobs.

“You can’t die, Macy! Don’t you want to be the God of War’s wife? As long as you’re fine, this position is yours!” Willow cried out.

Sylvia and the rest were shocked to hear what Willow said. Did Willow find out Caspian’s real identity?

1/4

It was at this moment that Macy slowly opened her eyes.

“You’re alive, Macy!” Sylvia cried out with joy.

The other armored soldiers were also overjoyed.

“What are you crying for? I’m not dead yet!” Macy said.

Everyone wiped the tears from their eyes.

Willow and Zoey let out a sigh of relief as well.

“Were you tricking us again, Macy? Were you pretending to be dead?” Sylvia asked with a serious look on her face.

“You think I have the time to pretend to be dead? I was knocked unconscious from the explosion, okay?”

“How dare you accuse and disrespect the God of War’s wife, Sylvia?” Macy asked irritably.

Just now, she ran all the way to the riverside and threw the bomb. But the shockwave was so strong that she was propelled into a tree where she knocked her head and fainted.

“Macy, I’m afraid you’re not the real God of War’s wife. I think it’s our Willow who’s the real God of War’s wife,” Zoey said.

Everyone was stunned when they heard Zoey.

“How do you know that Willow’s the God of War’s wife? I think that’s nonsense,” Macy thought that she had given it away again.

“Sylvia told us!” Zoey laughed.

“Hey, hey, don’t frame me. I never said that.” Sylvia kept shaking her head.

“You did! You referred to her as the God of War’s wife just now,” Zoey said.

Sylvia froze for a moment. She must have let her tongue slip in a moment of emergency.

Macy let out an awkward chuckle. This time, she might not be able to help Sylvia cover it up.

There was no use in trying to hide it anymore because Willow had already suspected it some time ago. Moreover, Sylvia had also spilled the beans.

“I need all of you to be honest with me. Is my husband, Caspian, really the Diatoran God of War?” Willow asked curiously.

Sylvia and Macy looked at each other. They did not know how to answer Willow.

Caspian had instructed them to keep his identity a secret before.

Because of that, both of them had been trying their best to keep it a secret.

+15 BONUS

However, now that the secret had been revealed, it was useless for them to continue denying it.

The armored soldiers lowered their heads as well, not daring to say a word.

When Willow saw their reactions, she was even more convinced that Casplan was, in fact, the God of War!

Willow was extremely surprised. But because Casplan had not personally told her yet, she was still rather dubious.

After all, this status and title were inconceivable to ordinary people.

Willow wanted to hear a definite answer before she could believe it completely.

“Macy, you tell me. What’s Caspian’s real identity?” Willow asked as she stared at Macy.

“I’m still dizzy from the explosion. My mind is a blank. I think it’s better that you ask Sylvia,” Macy swiftly passed the baton to Sylvia.

After all, it was because Sylvia accidentally gave it away that they were stuck in this situation. If anyone was to reveal the secret, it should be Sylvia..

Sylvia was speechless. She rolled her eyes at Macy.

Macy sure did find the most perfect timing to pretend that she had lost her memories.

“Macy was knocked unconscious just now, so her head must be all hazy now. So tell me, Sylvia. You’re always with Caspian. You must know his real identity,” Willow asked as she looked at Sylvia.

Sylvia was always with Caspian. If she were to claim that she did not know Caspian’s real identity, Willow would definitely not buy it.

Sylvia was in a dilemma. She was not sure how to answer.

She did not dare to act of her own accord without Caspian’s orders.

“Why are you hung up on this matter, Willow? Our comrades have been seriously injured. If they don’t get treated in time, they’ll lose too much blood and die!” Sylvia changed the topic swiftly and used the wounded soldiers as a diversion.”

“We should make a move, then. Let’s have them sent to the hospital,” Willow said. She agreed that they should prioritize saving their lives before anything else.

“Everyone, let’s send our injured teammates to the hospital,” Sylvia ordered. She was relieved that Willow was going along with it.

“Got it!” Several armored soldiers began to run back to the villa.

Willow and Zoey entered the villa as well. When they saw the bodies lying on the ground, they Fortunately, Cora had brought Flora to visit their relatives. If they had stayed back and witnessed everything, they would definitely have been frightened.

“I don’t think I can live here anymore,” Willow said fearfully.

“Yeah! You’ll surely have nightmares!” Zoey was also frightened.

“Just have this place cleaned up and you’ll be fine. There’s nothing to be afraid of,” Macy said.

“How can we not be afraid? Just thinking about how many people have died here gives me the chills. Willow, I don’t want to live here anymore. Can I go back to my place?” Zoey asked.

“You can’t! What about me? You have to stay with me!” Willow said. She was afraid of living on her own as well.

Now that dozens of people had died in the villa, they would not even dare to leave their rooms at night.

“Let’s rent a place or get a hotel. What do you think?” Zoey asked.

“You can’t. You must stay at the villa so that we can protect you,” Macy said.

Willow and Zoey could only concede.

Following this, Sylvia gave Joey a call.

“What’s the matter, General Frost?” Joey had just cleared the streets of the secret agents’ corpses when Sylvia called.

“Chief Sanders, a group of secret agents showed up at Riverside Villa. They have all been shot dead. Please send some people over to have the place cleaned up.” Sylvia felt slightly embarrassed as she had been frequently asking for Joey’s assistance lately.

Chapter 499 Three People Sharing a Bed

“What? Secret agents again?” Joey was baffled.

Even though she was the Inspector General, she had become the collector of cadavers.

“Got it. I’ll send my people over,” Joey replied. As the inspector general, she could not ignore this matter.

“Thank you very much,” Sylvia said.

Willow and Zoey were extremely frightened to see the situation in the villa. Both of them left the hall and only returned after the place was cleaned up.

As they had some free time on their hands while waiting for the scene to be cleared, Sylvia gave Caspian a call to report everything that happened.

“Keep it short. I’m swamped right now,” Caspian said while directing an ongoing battle.

“Today, there were two groups of enemies that wanted to attack Willow. Fortunately, we managed to interfere. But a dozen of our armored soldiers were seriously injured,” Sylvia said.

“What? What happened?” Caspian asked.

“On our way back to the villa, several secret agents ambushed us. Some of our men managed to block Willow from getting shot. The second incident happened at the villa.

“Some of the secret agents managed to sneak into the villa. Right when they were about to ambush, Macy noticed that something was off, and that was how we were able to avoid a tragedy.

“Macy led a few armored soldiers inside. After engaging in a life–and–death battle, several armored soldiers got injured.” Sylvia gave a brief summary of the events that went down.

“Thankfully, everything went well. As long as Macy is fine. All of you, please be extra careful.

“Danger is lurking everywhere. We aren’t sure when the enemies will appear,” Caspian ordered. From Sylvia’s account of the events, he could know how deadly the situation was then.

“We have to thank Macy. After annihilating the enemies, we discovered a time bomb hidden inside your bedroom’s closet. Macy was the one to pick up on the faint beeping sound.

“She carried the bomb in her arms and rushed toward the riverside. She managed to throw the bomb into the river. But because of the shockwave, she was propelled dozens of meters away.

“She passed out upon impact, but she’s fine now,” Sylvia recounted. She could still feel some of the lingering adrenaline from the events.

“I know. That’s why all of you have to be careful. Otherwise, your life may be in danger at any

“What is it?” Caspian asked.

“Your identity as the Diatoran God of War may have been discovered by Willow,” Sylvia said cautiously.

“Why would she know about it?” Caspian asked, puzzled.

“It’s all my fault. I had a slip of the tongue during those critical moments. That’s how Willow and Zoey became suspicious.

“I’ll gladly accept the punishment. I’m truly sorry for having exposed your real identity,” Sylvia replied.

Caspian remained silent.

After a while, he said, "Forget it. She was bound to find out anyway. It doesn't matter if she finds out about it now," Caspian said.

"I'll let her know your real identity, then?" Sylvia asked, feeling relieved.

If she was allowed to tell Willow about it, she would no longer have to worry about letting it slip again.

"No, it's better for me to tell her personally when I get back," Caspian said.

"Got it, Caspian. But you have to hurry. We're about to be exposed.

"The war is about to begin, Caspian. Are you planning to return to Southlake City?" she asked with urgency.

to:

"Southlake City might be the first stop for the enemy to attack Diatoran. I must oversee this battle myself!" Caspian said.

Hearing Caspian say this made Sylvia worried. Southlake City was in a state of disorder. Him returning at this time was not a good choice.

"The situation in Southlake City is critical now, Caspian. I think it's better for you to not come back now. You'll be safer in South Aridlands," Sylvia said in an urgent tone.

"How could I be afraid of danger when I'm the Diatoran God of War? I need to lead the troops to battle. I'm going back!" Caspian said with conviction.

"But a lot of spies are lurking in Southlake City now. They'll definitely keep their eyes on you if you come back! The situation will be too difficult to predict then," Sylvia persuaded.

"Don't worry, it won't be easy to assassinate me. When I return, I'll take the armored battalion with me. There's nothing you have to worry about. I'm busy. I'll hang up the phone now," Caspian said before ending the call.

Sylvia knew that she would not be able to change Casplan's mind.

Fortunately, Caspian would be bringing the armored battalion with him when he returned. That way, Sylvia had nothing to worry about.

The armored soldiers were reliable.

Joey had brought the people from the Inspector General's office to Riverside Villa to remove the corpses from the villa.

Sylvia had the armored soldiers clean up the floors..

They reinstalled all of the broken windows.

In the evening, they received news from Avon saying that even though the armored soldiers had been seriously injured, their lives were not in danger.

Meanwhile, in Dhord City, the King ignored everyone's dissuasion and was preparing to personally oversee the war in the West Aridlands.

The war in West Aridlands was tense. The King must personally supervise the situation there in order to boost morale.

The reason for West Aridlands' swift defeat was due to the generals having their own agenda. Dax was also very distressed.

They were facing a powerful enemy, but West Aridlands was not united. Because of this, they were fated to lose.

If the enemies managed to find their way into Dhord City, the aftermath would be disastrous.

This was why the King had made the decision to head down to West Aridlands to oversee the war in person.

As for South Aridlands, Caspian was there to oversee the war as the Diatoran God of War. The King had nothing to worry about.

Moreover, the King had issued an order saying that if something were to happen to him in West Aridlands, Caspian would be the one to succeed him!

As the king would be heading to West Aridlands, there was no one overseeing Dhord City. As a result, Joseph was temporarily stationed in Dhord City.

He was to manage the matters related to Dhord City.

At Riverside Villa, Willow and Zoey were persuading Macy to stay the night with them.

“Macy, why don’t you stay the night and sleep with us? Zoey is very timid as well. We’re all a little scared,” Willow requested.

“Yeah. I’m really timid. Please stay with us. We can have a chat,” Zoey said.

It was getting dark. Willow and Zoey were afraid of staying in the villa.

That was why they were pestering Macy to stay back with them at the villa.

“You can ask Sylvia too. Why must it be me?” Macy asked.

“Sylvia’s too busy. Also, I feel like she’s not the type to chat. Let’s not forget how amazingly skilled you are. You make us feel very safe!” Willow said as she tried to stroke Macy’s ego so that she would stay with them.

Macy felt so elated from the flattery that she covered her smile with her hand. The words of praise made her feel giddy.

“Fine. I’ll reluctantly stay with you for the night,” Macy agreed with a smile on her face.

“We’re really thankful, Macy!” Willow said happily.

“No problem, you’re being too kind. This is part of my duty,” Macy replied. The God of War’s wife had personally made a request. How could she refuse?

Chapter 500 The Diatoran God of War Oversees the War In Person

“We’re really thankful, Macy!” Willow said happily.

“No problem, you’re being too kind. This is part of my duty,” Macy replied. The God of War’s wife had personally made a request. How could she refuse?

“What do you mean? Weren’t you just claiming that you’re the God of War’s wife? That means you’re free to refuse us!” Zoey chimed in.

“Ah, then I’ll leave right now. Enjoy sleeping here alone in this humongous villa,” Macy teased.

What was Zoey thinking?

“No, you must sleep with us!” Willow said quickly.

“Then could you please stop bringing up the God of War thing?” Macy asked.

Willow approached Macy and asked, “We’re just curious. Are you really the God of War’s wife?”

“Haven’t you already guessed that I’m a fake? Why are you still asking me? You’re making things awkward for me,” Macy said, feeling slightly embarrassed.

She did not want to impersonate the God of War’s wife either. It was just that the situation. called for it. Besides, she was exposed before she could even keep the act for a longer time.

“Since you’ve admitted to faking it, then could you tell me who the real one is?” Willow really wanted to know Caspian’s real identity.

Even though Willow was confident that she was the real God of War’s wife, she was still doubtful of it. She wanted to hear a clear answer before fully believing in the fact.

“What? I don’t remember anymore. I think you should ask Sylvia about it. I’m suffering from should ask Sylvia about it. I’m suffering from short-term memory loss,” Macy prevaricated.

“Here you go again with that nonsense. You’re totally fine,” Willow said.

“It’s true! I’ve completely forgotten about all the things related to the God of War’s wife. I only remember the other stuff. In medical terms, it’s called selective amnesia,” Macy could only make things up in hopes of fooling her.

Seeing how Macy remained tight-lipped about it, Willow decided not to push further.

Willow, Zoey, and Macy entered the villa. The entire place was now very clean. It was as if the gunfight did not happen here at all.

Sylvia was delighted to hear that Macy was going to be sleeping with Willow and Zoey.

This way, Macy could better protect Willow.

Meanwhile, somewhere on the sea, ships from Vadesia and Astronia were approaching Diatoran.

They had even sent a portion of their people to Estrya in preparation for their coalition attack targeting Diatoran’s east coastline.

With the exception of the northern region, the entire Diatoran had enemies attacking from all directions.

These countries had already planned and made preparations to attack Diatoran.

In the South Aridlands war zone command center, an intelligence officer gave his report in a hurried manner.

“Commander, I have new information!” he said.

“Speak. What is it?” Caspian said.

“We have enemies on the west, east, and the south. They may be attacking together. Moreover, Astronia and Vadesia are preparing to join forces with Estrya to attack from the east coastline!” The intelligence officer gave a report about the current situation.

Hearing this, Caspian’s face darkened. He had faith that the southern region of Diatoran would be protected. But what about the other regions?

There was only one of him. He was not able to guard the other regions as well.

If Diatoran was attacked on all three sides, the country would be in great trouble.

Moreover, East Aridlands seemed to not be aware of the looming threat yet. Their defense force was very weak at the moment.

“Commander, what should we do about the threats coming in from all three sides?” Benjamin asked.

“Central Plains sent millions of soldiers, and they’re still on their way. Give Joseph a call immediately and have 500,000 soldiers dispatched to Eastern and Western Aridlands! Caspian ordered.

Now that the situation was changing rapidly, it was time they responded.

“But if that’s the case, only 500 thousand to 600 thousand men can reach South Aridlands. We have to face two large troops. I’m afraid that this will be very difficult for us!” Benjamin said.

“We already have a lot of soldiers in South Aridlands. With the additional troops, there’ll definitely be enough. It’s going to be fine as long as there are no major problems in the other two regions.” Caspian was confident.

“Very well. It’ll be best if Joseph of Central Plains can send over more reinforcements,” Benjamin said.

“No. Dhord City of Central Plains is the lifeline of Diatoran and must be protected. Now that the King is not in Dhord City, the people of Dhord City are distracted. There must not be any mishaps,” Caspian said.

Benjamin nodded. He agreed with Caspian.

Following this, Benjamin began to contact Joseph of Central Plains to have him allocate some troops to Eastern and Western Aridlands.

Joseph might be a Champion, but because Caspian was his leader, he must obey his orders.

After receiving Caspian’s orders, Joseph sprung into action immediately and conveyed the order.

“The situation is urgent. I’ll be going to Southlake City to oversee the battle tomorrow,” Caspian said in a serious tone.

“You mustn’t, Commander! You must take charge of the overall situation in South Aridlands. Besides, once the war starts, Southlake City will be in great danger,” Benjamin said.

“Why can’t I? The King has personally gone down to West Aridlands. Why can’t I head down to Southlake City?” Caspian asked.

“But Diatoran is currently surrounded by enemies on all three sides. If you’re not commanding remotely, I’m afraid that the order will get messed up!” Benjamin said anxiously.

“Don’t worry about it. Now that communications are so advanced, I can still give orders even at Southlake City. I must head over there and see for myself before I can be assured,” Caspian said.

“Let me come with you, then. I can take care of you too,” Benjamin said as he nodded. He knew very well that he would not be able to change Caspian’s mind.

“No, you have to stay here and supervise the battle!” Caspian refused.

“Why?” Benjamin asked, puzzled.

“South Aridlands can’t go without a leader. You must be the one to preside here. You have to stay back here,” Caspian ordered.

“Alright then. Please be careful on your way,” Benjamin conceded. Caspian had already made up his mind. There was nothing more that Benjamin needed to say.

At Riverside Villa, there were many people patrolling outside the villa.

Macy and Willow were sitting on the sofa, watching TV.

Meanwhile, Zoey was hovering over her computer and writing non-stop.

“Let’s go to sleep. It’s already late. It’s almost 12,” Willow said while rubbing her eyes.

“Okay, I’m getting sleepy too,” Macy replied.

“Very well. The three of us shall sleep together. That way, we won’t be afraid,” Willow said.

“What? The three of us on a bed? Wouldn’t that be too crowded?” Macy asked rather awkwardly.

“Don’t worry, it won’t. My bed is really big. It’s totally big enough for the three of us. You’re not allowed to sleep in another room. You have to sleep with us,” Willow said firmly.

If Macy was not with them, she would definitely not be able to sleep.

“Fine,” Macy nodded.

Three of the women entered the bedroom.

“So, this is your and Caspian’s bedroom? What is this?” Macy had just entered the room when she discovered a transparent object on the bed. It looked like an uninflated balloon.
