Chapter 711 Fight Back

“I’ve already ordered the main forces to split into three routes. By then, the attention of the Filrenians will surely be drawn by the large army. I’ll take the armored battalion and Phoenix Vanguard to rescue Macy. They definitely won’t be able to react that quickly,” Caspian replied.

“That’s indeed a good plan, but you’ll be trapped in the thick of it. Even if you manage to rescue Macy, what will you do then?” Dax said.

“I have a solution for that. Don’t worry about it,” Caspian said.

“Alright. Do we need to inform the King about this matter?” Dax asked.

“No need. His Majesty has other matters to attend to.” Caspian immediately turned down the idea.

Caspian knew that once Balthazar knew about his plan, he would definitely not agree. So, Caspian couldn’t let him know about it.

“Lord Caspian, you must take care!” Dax said.

“Don’t worry. Time waits for no one, so we must hurry. We’ll act at midnight!” Caspian said.

“Yes!” the many generals echoed.

After the meeting ended, Coco also sent a layout of the internal structure of Death Mountain Prison.

Upon receiving the map, Caspian immediately studied it with Sylvia and others to plan how to rescue Macy.

All troops were ready, and they officially set out at midnight.

The missiles in the launch silos were also ready to be launched. At that time, the missiles would destroy the main bases of Filren.

All the fighter jets were prepared at the airport and could take off at any time to strike Filren from the air.

At the Andrews' residence, a conversation was taking place.

"Diatoran is preparing for war, and War God Caspian is the overall commander of this operation. He has already rushed to West Aridlands. This is a rare opportunity for us," Jerry said.

"Dad, then what are we waiting for? Let's start tonight!" Zane said.

"Yes! Now that the five Champions are not in Dhord City and there are no powerful figures around the King, this is our best opportunity!" Kelvin said.

"It does seem like the best time now, but we still need to wait a bit longer," Jerry said.

"Dad! Why do we have to wait again? Until when do we have to wait?" Kelvin asked anxiously.

"We must wait until both sides officially go to war before we can act," Jerry answered.

"Why?" Zane was puzzled.

"Once the war starts, Caspian definitely won't be able to turn back and save the King. But then, we can also act without worries," Jerry explained.

He had been working as a high-ranking official for many years, so he had more insight than his sons.

“Alright, we’ll be patient. There’s no rush for now,” Kelvin said.

“By the way, let the subordinates of the Skyarch Palace be prepared. We might need to act any time!” Jerry instructed.

“Okay. The experts from Skyarch Palace have been eager for a long time. They’ve been eager to show their skills,” Kelvin said.

“Tell them that after their success, each will be generously rewarded!” Jerry promised.

When Filren learned that Diatoran had assembled many troops in West Aridlands, they started to panic.

Byron quickly summoned all high-ranking officials for an emergency meeting.

Everyone had different opinions this time around. Some asked for peace while others believed they should fight.

The discussion was heated and at times uncontrollable.

Byron had just taken office, so he didn’t have much authority in his words.

After ho

Chapter 712 Unstoppable

Countless tanks and armored vehicles surged forward from West Aridlands.

Numerous fighter jets had also taken off from the West Aridlands War Zone as they were ready to strike!

Those Filrenian troops had long been left stunned by the missiles, and their surroundings had turned into ruins.

The high-ranking officials had just finished their meeting and hadn’t returned from the capital.

Filren was already in turmoil with Byron taking office. No one had expected the sudden attack from Diatoran.

The million-strong army of Diatoran advanced victoriously. They sang all the way with an unstoppable momentum!

Caspian, the armored battalion, and Phoenix Vanguard didn't rush to act.

Caspian planned to ambush when the Filrenian troops' attention was diverted and then rescue Macy.

Now was not the time yet. He needed to wait patiently for a while longer.

There were many obstacles in the quest to rescue Macy, so Caspian needed to be cautious.

A night had passed.

The million-strong army of Diatoran swept through cities and conquered territories, bringing continuous victories.

Meanwhile, Filren's forces suffered heavy casualties as they were caught off guard and repeatedly defeated.

When the Diatoranians learned of this news, they were ecstatic.

At this moment, they felt immensely proud because their country had finally become powerful!

Diatoran no longer had to cater to others' whims!

The era of their country being bullied by other nations was long gone.

Balthazar was extremely excited to know that the troops had continuous victories under Caspian's command.

"Lord Caspian is indeed a military genius! Every battle he commands is undefeated!" a high-ranking official said.

"Of course. Ever since becoming the God of War, Lord Caspian has never been defeated!" Balthazar said.

“Your Majesty made the right choice to appoint Lord Caspian as the overall commander!” an official began to flatter Balthazar.

“If Diatoran had a few more War Gods like Caspian, I would’ve been worry-free long ago!” Balthazar said.

“A genius like Lord Caspian is rare. It’s not easy for one to appear!”

“Yes! Judging by the current situation, our army will soon conquer the capital of Filren.”

Several high-ranking officials continued to discuss.

Balthazar and those high-ranking officials were ecstatic about Caspian’s continuous victories, but there was one person whose face was gloomy with worry.

That person was none other than Jerry.

He had planned to revolt, but looking at the situation now, he dared not act easily.

If he started a revolt now and Caspian found out about it, he would be doomed once Caspian returned to rescue Balthazar.

Jerry wanted to see the front line embroiled in a tough battle so that Caspian wouldn’t have the chance to rescue Balthazar.

However, with Diatoran’s forces being unstoppable, Caspian couldn’t possibly be in danger.

Unless he informed Filren about Caspian’s battle plans.

Unfortunately, Caspian’s plans were kept confidential. Jerry had no way of knowing them.

He could only silently pray in his heart, hoping that Caspian would lead the troops personally as before. That way, he would be trapped in a siege.

At Southlake City, Willow and others were overjoyed when they heard the news.

It was at this moment that they realized Caspian had left hurriedly because there was a war.

All the schools in Southlake City had officially begun classes today.

Willow and Sherry took Cecilia to register.

Caspian had already arranged a school for her.

Cecilia's enrollment issue had also been resolved.

She wasn't afraid of death; she just had many attachments and concerns.

The bald man was covered in wounds as he had been kicked by Macy.

He had no chance of fighting back now.

But due to her restraints, she couldn't hit him too hard. If it were under normal circumstances, she would have kicked this man to death already.

The footsteps outside were getting closer and closer. Macy made up her mind to kill the bald man before the other prison guards arrived.

She tightened the iron chain in her hands and wrapped it around the bald man's neck. He was now left with no more strength left.

His face was red from being strangled by Macy. He was struggling desperately.

In the end, he was suffocated to death.

In the last moment before death, he felt extremely regretful. Not only did he fail to gain any benefit, but he also lost his life.

At this moment, a group of soldiers armed with guns rushed in.

When they saw two prison guards lying on the ground and another one being strangled to death by Macy, they were stunned.

“Act now! Stop her!” the leading captain shouted.

The soldiers rushed over, and Macy wanted to resist.

But facing so many armed soldiers, she had no strength to fight back at all.

Macy was knocked to the ground, and the soldiers beat her violently.

“Stop it!” the captain shouted.

“Captain! This prisoner assassinated our King and killed several people. It’s better to execute her now!” a soldier said viciously.

“You know nothing! His Majesty wants to execute her publicly. We can’t act recklessly,” the captain said.

After hearing this, the other soldiers had to give up.

“What’s going on with these three? Why did they invade the prisoner’s cell?” the captain asked.

“Yes! Such a woman is simply beautiful! Any man would be unable to resist himself!”

“I wonder if she’s skilled in bed? I really want to try her out!”

Several soldiers saw Macy’s beauty and had some wicked thoughts.

Although she looked a bit disheveled now, it didn't affect her charm at all.

Macy didn't expect that just after dealing with three perverts, another group would come.

"Captain, since she's going to be executed anyway, why don't we have some fun?"

"Yeah. It's not easy for us to guard here in the middle of the night. It's a good time to relieve some stress."

Several soldiers spoke up all at once.

"If you want to play, then play. But be careful," the captain said.

"Thank you, Captain!" The soldiers were overjoyed.

Seeing their lecherous looks, Macy felt extremely frightened.

This prison was too horrible, and these people were simply beasts!

With so many soldiers, she couldn't fight back at all.

It seemed that she was really in trouble. The thought of being violated made Macy feel extremely distressed.

"Hold her down! Let me go first!" the captain suddenly said.

The soldiers were surprised to see that even their captain couldn't resist the temptation!

"What's going on outside?" a soldier asked nervously.

"This is bad! Quick, go see what's happening!" The captain hastily put on his clothes and dashed out in a panic.

The other soldiers knew that something was going on. They had no more intention of playing with Macy. Everyone followed the captain and rushed out.

Before leaving, they locked the cell door again.

Macy breathed a sigh of relief seeing them leave.

At that moment, a chaotic noise came from outside.

Screams echoed, and the thunderous sound of gunfire filled the air.

Macy was startled by the sounds coming from outside.

She wondered if Diatoran forces had come to rescue her.

Little did Macy know, Caspian was leading the armored battalion and Phoenix Vanguard to rescue her.

Outside Death Mountain Prison, Caspian, armed with the Diatanium dagger, led the armored battalion in a fierce attack.

Caspian had changed his route abruptly tonight, catching the enemy off guard. He intended to rescue Macy as quickly as possible to prevent any unforeseen events.

The minute he arrived at Death Mountain Prison with his force, they began a fierce assault.

Caspian also left tens of thousands of troops to guard outside Death Mountain Prison.

Once Byron learned of the situation at Death Mountain Prison, he would definitely send reinforcements. Caspian had to block the reinforcements outside to have a chance to rescue Macy.

The gunfire grew more intense, and the armored battalion fought with full vigor. as they launched a fierce attack on Death Mountain Prison. The prison guards were overwhelmed, unable to put up any resistance.

Although Death Mountain Prison was heavily guarded, the prison guards stood- no chance against the armored battalion.

+15 BONOS

The armored battalion had fought alongside Caspian in numerous battles. The experience they had was not something to be compared with ordinary prison guards.

The soldiers who ran out from the prison were petrified to see Diatoran's troops outside.

The armored battalion had surrounded the entire area of the prison.

Countless tanks and armored vehicles bombarded the prison walls, causing them to crumble.

The soldiers who had just arrived outside the prison were scared and hurriedly turned back inside.

They didn't want to be bombed by the Diatoran's cannons.

"What's going on? Why are there so many Diatoranian soldiers here? Wasn't their main force attacking the capital?"

"Yeah! Where did they come from?"

"Why would the Diatoranian soldiers attack the prison?"

"They must be here to rescue that prisoner, Macy."

"That makes sense. It's so unbelievable that they're mobilizing such a large force just for a woman!"

The soldiers inside the prison were terrified.

The prison officer, who was resting, was awakened by the noises outside.

"Officer, bad news!" A guard rushed in while panicking.

"What's wrong?" the officer asked, still groggy.

“There are suddenly many soldiers from Diatoran outside!” the guard answered.

“How is that possible? Why would Diatoran’s troops attack the prison?” the officer asked in disbelief.

“I don’t know! These people seem to have appeared out of nowhere, and we’re completely caught off guard,” the guard said anxiously.

“What’s the situation outside?” the officer asked again.

The officer was stunned. He had only taken a nap for a moment. How could they

The prison was heavily guarded, and their equipment was top-notch. Who could have expected that everything would crumble so easily before Diatoran’s attack?

After making the arrangements, Byron felt quite pleased with himself.

“Caspian, they say you’re an invincible God of War. I wanted to see just how terrifying you are. Who would’ve thought you’d be so arrogant? You brought this upon yourself, so don’t blame me for being ruthless!” he muttered to himself.

Ever since the attack began, the Filrenian forces had been consistently losing, which made Byron extremely frustrated.

He knew that if things continued like this, he would soon be ousted from power.

Just when he was at a loss, Caspian provided him with a perfect opportunity.

He felt that if he could eliminate Caspian, it would surely sow chaos among Diatoran's troops. That would give him the chance to lead a strong counter-attack.

Hence, this was an extremely rare opportunity.

Byron ordered half of the soldiers in the capital to eliminate Caspian.

In his view, Caspian's solo infiltration for the sake of rescuing a woman was just plain foolish.

What general would endanger himself to save a subordinate?

Upon receiving the orders from Byron, the soldiers of Filren's capital immediately headed out, ready to coordinate with their comrades at the prison to besiege Caspian.

The garrison of the capital numbered about 600 thousand, with half of them previously dispatched to fend off the Diatoranian forces.

Now, nearly 200 thousand were sent to eliminate Caspian, leaving only about 100 thousand defenders in the capital.

At Death Mountain Prison, the prison officer led his subordinates to confront Caspian's forces.

However, these prison guards were no match for the armored battalion.

Caspian even dispatched his trusted confidant, Sylvia, to command the battle.

Despite the prison's defensible position, they still struggled against the ferocious assault from Diatoran.

+15 BONOS

Seeing the prison already in ruins from the bombardment, Caspian waved his hand and shouted, "Charge in!"

He had long anticipated that Byron would send reinforcements, so he aimed to rescue Macy in the shortest time possible.

Upon his command, Sylvia led the armored battalion and charged forward. There were tanks at the forefront, followed closely by numerous soldiers.

The prison guards were powerless against them.

The prison officer was astonished to see his subordinates falter against Caspian's assault.

In less than ten minutes, Caspian's forces were already on the verge of entering the prison. With the current situation, they couldn't hold on much longer.

Terrified, the officer hurriedly reported the situation to the higher-ups once again.

However, they informed him that reinforcements were on their way but would take some time and urged him to hold out as long as possible.

If he failed to hold out, he would be punished with the death penalty!

The prison officer also knew that reinforcements wouldn't arrive anytime soon. The only option now was to continue holding the line.

The internal structure of the prison was complex, but if they could utilize the terrain well, they could definitely delay Caspian for some time.

Once the armored battalion entered the prison gates, they halted and ceased using cannons.

Otherwise, if the prison was bombed and Macy was killed inside, it would be a tragedy.

"Charge in and rescue our hero, Macy!" Caspian ordered again.

Upon hearing the command, the armored battalion and Phoenix Vanguard immediately jumped off their vehicles. They launched their attack.

The members of Phoenix Vanguard were full of vigor this time as they were determined to rescue their captain.

There were about 100 thousand armored soldiers, and not all of them entered the prison. Most of them remained outside to continue standing guard.

Caspian and Sylvia simply led the charge inside.

At this moment, the enemy forces finally realized their situation. Waiting around would only lead them to their doom. If they didn't fight back, they would be left with no choice but to face death.

Soon after, these enemy troops began to retaliate against the Diatoranian forces on both sides.

Although the enemy forces were numerous, half of them were already dead or injured.

There were about 60 to 70 thousand armored soldiers sent by Caspian. Each was highly combat-effective.

At this moment inside Death Mountain Prison, Caspian was leading Phoenix Vanguard and was unstoppable.

They encountered almost no resistance because these prison guards were no match for them.

The prison officer and his men arrived at where Macy was held.

"Get her out immediately!" the officer shouted.

Time was of the essence, and he had to take Macy with him. She was his last card to play.

The officer and a dozen prison guards rushed into Macy's cell.

She knew that Diatoran's forces must already be on their way to rescue her.

These prison guards were probably planning to use her as a hostage.

But how could Macy, who had undergone rigorous training, surrender willingly?

She jumped up and kicked the two guards charging toward her.

The thought of those guards trying to defile her filled her with rage.

Since Macy's ankle shackles were opened, she was able to move freely.

With two muffled sounds, she kicked the guards and sent them flying.

Seeing this, the prison officer and his subordinates were shocked.

They were surprised as to how Macy could move freely and wondered where her shackles went.

Before they could react, Macy launched a fierce counter-attack.

The unprepared guards were easily defeated.

"Capture her at all costs!" the officer shouted.

The remaining guards swarmed in. They refused to believe that they couldn't take down Macy.

As the captain of Phoenix Vanguard, Macy had faced many challenging situations before. She wasn't afraid of these prison guards.

Despite still being handcuffed, she easily dealt with them.

Several guards were kicked to death by Macy.

Seeing her formidable skills, the officer panicked. His men were powerless against her.

He had hoped to use Macy as leverage to protect himself, but now he found himself in a predicament.

With this realization, the officer turned and fled.

After witnessing Macy's skills, he dared not lay a hand on her. If things continued like this, he might end up being the one kidnapped.

All he wanted now was to leave as quickly as possible.

However, as soon as the officer ran out of the cell, he was stabbed through the heart by a dagger!

He looked up and saw that the one who attacked him was none other than the Diatoranian God of War, Caspian!

Macy was about to chase after him when she saw Caspian appear outside the cell.

The Diatanium dagger in his hand had pierced the officer's heart.

She was incredibly shocked and couldn't believe what was happening before her eyes.

Caspian had personally led a team to rescue her!

He was the Diatoranian God of War. Yet, he was risking so much to save her!

Macy was both shocked and delighted. Her emotions were extremely complicated at this moment.

Caspian and the members of Phoenix Vanguard arrived just in time. Seeing the prison officer trying to escape, Caspian dealt him a fatal blow.

"C-Caspian!" Right after the officer uttered Caspian's name, he spat out a

"Yes!" Although Sylvia didn't understand why, she immediately complied.

After Caspian handed the dagger to her, he lifted Macy with both hands.

Macy's heart raced, and her face flushed.

Caspian actually wanted to carry her with so many people around.

She felt a bit overwhelmed and shy.

But since Caspian didn't say anything, she simply wrapped her arms around his neck.

This was probably her only chance to get close to him.

The reason Caspian personally carried Macy was that he felt she had made significant contributions this time. She even assassinated Camden.

She was now a hero of Diatoran.

As the Diatoranian God of War, it was only appropriate for him to carry her out

The members of Phoenix Vanguard and the armored battalion were deeply moved to see Caspian carrying Macy out..

Caspian treated his subordinates so well.

He carried Macy in his arms and walked out of the prison cell while Macy walked in front with the soldiers to clear the way outside.

In truth, Sylvia's heart was now filled with envy toward Macy. She wished she were the one being carried.

The Phoenix Vanguard members stood by, guarding Caspian.

At this moment, Macy felt like the happiest woman in the world.

She even felt like she was dreaming.

She had infiltrated the enemy country and accomplished the assassination mission. Although she was heavily injured, being in Caspian's arms this instant made her feel extremely happy.

Though she was a brave warrior as the captain of Phoenix Vanguard, deep down, she was also just a woman.

Being held by Caspian like this made all her suffering worthwhile.

+15 BONOS

The armored soldiers outside were extremely excited to see Caspian carrying Macy out.

They had initially thought the rescue mission would be very dangerous.

However, seeing Caspian bringing Macy out safely put their mind at ease.

After Caspian carried Macy out, he immediately had the accompanying military doctor provide her with emergency treatment.

Macy didn't want to leave Caspian's embrace as she wished to be held by him forever.

"Tear this place to the ground!" Caspian instructed Sylvia.

"Yes!" Sylvia acknowledged.

She went outside and ordered the troops there, "Under Lord Caspian's command, tear this place to the ground!"

The armored battalion immediately began bombarding the prison.

In the next moment, cannons filled the sky. Death Mountain Prison was left crumbling.

Some of the prison guards inside wanted to hide and wait for the bombardment to end before making their escape.

Little did they know, the prison collapsed directly and buried them all alive.

Just a few minutes, Death Mountain Prison became a ruin, and everyone inside perished.

At this time, Caspian received a call from the armored battalion's commander, Ylra Hauss.

"Lord Caspian, the new King of Filren did send troops to reinforce Death Mountain Prison," Ylra said.

"How many soldiers did he send?" Caspian asked.

"About 200 thousand soldiers, mostly from Filren's capital. That's more than three times our number," Ylra replied.

"I didn't expect this. Is Byron betting everything on this?" Caspian said.

"Lord Caspian, how's the situation on your side? Has Macy been rescued?" Ylra asked.

"I've rescued her, and Death Mountain Prison is now in ruins," Caspian replied.

At this moment, Byron was still immersed in his own happiness.

He was still thinking that his troops might've already annihilated Caspian's forces.

He had been waiting for news all this while.

As long as Byron could destroy Caspian, he could build his reputation and solidify his position.

By then, Filren could also sound the horn of a counter-attack.

They might even seize the opportunity to take down Diatoran!

However, despite waiting anxiously, he hadn't received any news from Death Mountain Prison.

In the end, he couldn't wait any longer and immediately made a call to inquire about the situation.

“How's the situation on your end?” Byron asked.

The one who answered the phone was the commander of the 200 thousand soldiers sent as reinforcements.

“Your Majesty, we haven't even reached Death Mountain Prison. We were ambushed halfway!” the commander replied.

“What? You were ambushed?” Byron was astonished.

“Yes. We're currently fighting back with all our might,” the commander answered.

“How could they know that we had sent reinforcements? Could it be that Caspian is really that extraordinary? And how’s the situation at the prison?” Byron asked with a trembling heart.

“I don’t know either. Right now, everything is chaotic on our end, and we have no time to focus on the situation at the prison,” the commander said somewhat resentfully.

He never had much confidence in the new King of Filren. He had no talent for leading troops in battle; he was just giving random orders.

“Regardless, you must eliminate Diatoran’s troops at all costs. I’ll immediately inquire about the situation at the prison,” Byron said before hanging up the phone.

He then dialed the number for Death Mountain Prison.

However, after dialing for a long time, he couldn’t get through at all.

At this moment, Byron began to feel afraid as he had a foreboding feeling.

Death Mountain Prison was already in a precarious situation. Without reinforcements, they would surely be defeated soon.

Now that he couldn’t even get through to them on the phone, there was only one possibility—the prison had already fallen.

Byron suddenly panicked when he thought about the little over 100 thousand troops and how Caspian’s forces were nowhere to be found.

He felt that with Caspian’s character, it was very likely that he would lead his troops to attack them.

Just as he was about to call the commander of the 200 thousand soldiers who were sent to reinforce the prison to instruct them to return and defend, an urgent call came in.

“Hello, what’s the matter?” Byron asked.

“Your Majesty, bad news. Caspian is leading the armored battalion and has arrived near the capital!” the officer in charge of defending the city said anxiously.

“What? How could Caspian arrive so quickly!” Byron was trembling with fear.

“I don’t know, but I can assure you that it’s Caspian’s troops. I’ve already seen the insignias of the armored battalion. There’s no mistake,” the officer replied.

“Organize the troops immediately and stop Caspian! We must defend the capital!”

Byron was in a panic.

“We only have a little over 100 thousand troops. How can we deal with the God of War?” The officer was not confident in battling it out with Caspian.

“The capital is as solid as a fortress. Caspian won’t be able to break in so easily. Moreover, there are only a few armored soldiers. There’s nothing to fear!” Byron pretended to be calm.

“Your Majesty, I think to ensure nothing goes wrong, it’s better to have those reinforcements return to defend quickly!” the officer suggested.

“I understand, Your Majesty. I’m now preparing to lead the troops to a life-and-death battle with Diatoran. You must hold onto the capital. Once I eliminate Byron grunted in acknowledgment and immediately hung up the phone.

A minute later, another urgent call came from the commander defending the city.

"Your Majesty! Bad news! Caspian's troops have begun to attack!" the commander said urgently.

"I know. What's the situation? Do you have confidence in holding out?" Byron asked with concern.

If Caspian and his troops could breach the capital directly, his life would be at stake.

"We can definitely hold out for a short period, but if this continues, I'm not so sure," the defending commander replied.

"Don't worry for now. I've already contacted the reinforcements. They'll support us soon. By then, we can make arrangements inside and outside to annihilate Caspian. Right now, we just need to hold on," Byron said.

"How long will it take for them to support us?" the defending commander asked.

"They should be coming soon. They've already launched a full-scale attack with 200 thousand troops. It should be more than enough to wipe out the armored battalion," Byron said.

"Alright, we can hold out for some time anyway. Let's hope they arrive soon," the defending commander said.

"Yes. You'd better lead the soldiers to defend quickly!" Byron said.

Outside the capital of Filren, the armored battalion was launching a fierce cannon assault. Although the Filrenian troops were trying their best to counter-attack, they were struggling.

The battle between the armored battalion and the reinforcements from Filren had entered a tense phase.

However, the armored battalion, with their extensive combat experience, still had the upper hand.

At Balthazar's mansion in Diatoran, he learned that Caspian had risked his life to rescue Macy. This left him unable to sleep as he eagerly waited for news of Caspian.

"Report! Your Majesty, Lord Caspian's troops have successfully rescued Macy," a guard reported.

"Excellent! Lord Caspian is truly unstoppable!" Balthazar exclaimed excitedly.

"Your Majesty, it's late at night now, and Macy is safe. You should rest early," the guard suggested.

"I'm so excited right now that I don't feel sleepy at all," Balthazar replied, filled with excitement.

A few minutes later, another guard rushed in.

"Report Your Majesty, I have the latest news!" the guard exclaimed.

"Speak!" Balthazar ordered.

"Byron sent troops to Death Mountain Prison, but they were intercepted by the ambush set up by Lord Caspian!" the guard said.

"Excellent! With Lord Caspian's strategic planning, he must've anticipated Byron's next move; so he sent people to prepare for an ambush early on. With such a victorious God of War, how could Filren be our match?" Balthazar laughed heartily.

The soldier continued, "His Majesty, there's another war report. Lord Caspian has now led his troops to launch a surprise attack on the capital of Filren!"

"Lord Caspian's move is truly ingenious! Byron must now have very few troops left. Lord Caspian's ability to adapt on the fly is admirable!" Balthazar became even more excited.
