

Chapter 33 A habit of taking care of others

Inadvertently, Elena remembered that once Elizabeth Taylor said she was perverted, and that comment really fitted her!

Like now, she should have been crying in the room, but when she heard about this, she actually had the urge to applaud and laugh. How ironic it is!

Elena licked her lips and said to Elizabeth Taylor: "Don't try to manipulate Alston from far away, you should pay more attention to your husband. Open your eyes."

After saying that without waiting for Elizabeth Taylor's reaction, she hung up the phone. The corners of her mouth curled up in a smile that made her even more like a fox, or at least Joey thought so.

He cleaned up the kitchen and came out, seeing such a smiling Elena, as if the girl he had just seen in tears did not exist at all.

"What's so funny?" Joey asked curiously.

"Nothing!" Although Elena said so, her hands did not stop.

She typed a message quickly and then sent it to a phone number that she knew by heart.

Joey was slightly downcast and said to Elena, "Miss, summer vacation starts on the day after tomorrow."

Elena thought about it and said, "I will send you the company address, you can come whenever it's suitable for you. I will let my HR send you the offer, so, give me a copy of your resume."

Her words had just finished, and Joey had sent his resume over. She looked at it, and looked at Joey.

She couldn't help but exclaim: "I didn't expect it, you're actually an all-rounder!"

This sincere exclamation made Joey blush a little, "I'm just working different jobs."

"Too modest," Elena shook her head, "in the company, there is no need to hide your ability. The company needs talent, not an old bird."

The corners of Joey's mouth twitched and then he agreed.

Elena arranged for the driver to send him out, and only then did she look more closely at his resume.

Both his parents died in a car accident, and his address confirmed to her that he was indeed the one she had in mind.

That butterfly birthmark!

This matter, in fact, is a knot in her heart. When she was a little girl, and lived in a distant community, all her friends were moved with their parents one by one and finally left her.

She was the most popular of children when she was a child, and the child with the butterfly birthmark was the youngest of them.

She doesn't remember when that child stopped showing up anymore. She asked the other children and they didn't know anything about what happened to his family.

She asked her parents but learned that the boy's parents had died in a car accident and he was about to be put in an orphanage.

She was so worried that she ran to his house to look for him and saw, instead, a car with that child driving away.

The child's unlit eyes carved straight into her heart.

After that day, she became even more demanding of herself, believing that she was not strong enough, so much so that she, the eldest sister, could not even protect her youngest brother.

She fell silent and spent all her energy on her studies.

And Alston's appearance, in fact, was an accident . Because his smile made her remember so deeply that she thought it was love.
