

Chapter 39 Force him to learn

She hates roses? Alston couldn't believe it. Clearly, he had asked her before.

No, he seemed to have asked what flowers girls generally liked. He was pursuing Elizabeth at the time, and at that time his relationship with Elena was actually not as bad as now until he knew what was on her mind.

Alston pinched the bridge of his nose and tried to throw the rose in his hand into the garbage can, but was shouted at by a sanitation worker next to him, "Young man, if you want to throw it away, why don't you give it to me?"

He thought about it, handed the flowers to the worker, and then watched as he unpacked the bouquet and gave them to little kids who passed by.

The children were overjoyed to get the flowers and expressed their gratitude to him one by one.

Yes, the sanitation worker informed the children that it was this uncle who wanted to give them flowers, but he was a little embarrassed.

So, Alston was surrounded by these enthusiastic children, and he was a bit overwhelmed.

Although his cold face discouraged the children a bit, looking at the flower in his hands, they still felt that the uncle was a good person. He just didn't know how to express himself.

After that, Alston immediately drove away.

Although in the end, because of those children, he was a little happy, what he wanted was not achieved.

Alston drove to the beach to get some air, and turned off the phone. He did not know what he wanted to do for a while. And there was nothing to think about.

After staying for a whole day, Alston still didn't want to give up. Thinking that the relationship between his mother and Elena was good, he made a phone call and wanted to seek his mother's help.

Caroline Collin flew back from abroad three days later when Elena and Joey had already gone to New Zealand on business.

This time the partner was a big client, and the two people were very careful.

Not only that, they even conducted a simulation exercise, of course, mainly to train Joey.

By the time the project was successfully completed, Joey was already a qualified regular employee.

Elena is very satisfied with his ability. His ability to adapt is very strong, and he is simply a genius.

She felt that if Joey wanted to further his education, he could have gone to that famous college.

In the end, it was his orphan status that limited his development.

Although he has been working before, by the class restrictions, he was not able to continue to learn.

Now Elena was willing to train him with all her might, how could he not be grateful? He even began to thank the roommate who tricked him into the bar in the first place.

If not for this misadventure, he would not have seen such a good development in this life, right?
