

Chapter 13

Markus' eyes were sharp.

At the thought that she had to assist Markus in looking for the owner of the pendant, Katty had no way to keep calm.

She lowered her head and tried her best to show her sincerity when apologizing. Markus could only stroke his temples and said resignedly, "Get back to your work."

"Okay, Mr. Hunt."

Hearing Markus' words, Katty heaved a sigh of relief and ran to her desk.

Markus glanced at her with his deep eyes and didn't say anything else. He turned around to walk into Chris' office.

Katty forced herself to focus on her work, yet she kept recalling the scene in the break room in her mind.

She warned herself that she could no longer be reckless in the future, or else she would get into big trouble.

Katty didn't know what Chris and Markus were discussing in the office. An hour passed gradually, and Markus finally went out.

As he left, the intercom on Katty's desk rang out, and she looked into the chairman's office subconsciously.

Through the glass window, she met Chris' cold and gloomy eyes.

Katty lowered her head in fright and picked up the call. "Hello."

"Come in."

Chris' deep and indifferent voice could be heard on the other side of the line, and he hung up with only one sentence.

Katty tightened her grip on the phone, feeling so nervous as if her heart would jump out of her chest.

She held the information for the meeting an hour and a half later and plucked up all her courage to enter the chairman's office.

The moment Katty opened the door, she could feel the intense atmosphere in the office, as well as the tremendous pressure from Chris.

"Mr. Albert, this is the information for the meeting later. Please take a look."

As Katty spoke, she respectfully put the documents on the desk and pushed them in front of Chris.

His slender fingers were tapping on the rosewood desk in rhythm.

Katty felt that her heartbeat gradually followed the rhythm.

Seeing Chris remain silent, she almost couldn't bear the pressure and felt it reach her limit.

After a long while, just as Katty was on the verge of collapse, Chris finally said, "What did you see just now?"

"Nothing. I didn't see anything!" Katty lied in a hurry.

Seeing Chris' naked body with her eyes was as serious as having a one-night stand with him that night. If Katty told Chris about that, she couldn't imagine what would happen to her next.

She didn't want to be fired.

Katty looked up nervously and happened to meet Chris' deep eyes. For a moment, she was under a kind of delusion.

It seemed that there was not much coldness in Chris' eyes...

After only a glance, Katty lowered her head quickly. "I didn't see anything, indeed. Mr. Albert, please believe me."

"Really?" Chris' tone turned colder.

Katty nodded firmly.

She struggled to remain composed when fooling Chris as she did after that night.

Chris chuckled all of a sudden.

This was the first time Katty had heard him laugh like that. It was both cold and evil, which tortured Katty's mind even more.

Chris didn't pursue further and looked away from her, saying seriously, "Go out."

"Okay."

Katty bowed respectfully and left the chairman's office in a hurry.

Chris looked at her escaping back, and the corner of his lips curved into a soft smile.

Before Katty could sit on her chair, Markus' assistant asked her to go to his office.

Other than Markus, there was someone else in the office.

Katty asked, "Mr. Hunt, what can I do for you?"

"Come here and take a look. Is the video the one you watched in the hotel that night?"

Katty became nervous again.

She roared in her heart, "Video? Is it the one Tally and I had destroyed before? How can it..."

Flustered as she was, Katty's face paled bit by bit.

She looked at Markus in a daze, unable to respond.

Seeing Katty stand in place motionlessly, Markus furrowed his brows. "Miss Minj? Miss Minj!"

"Yes?"

"I asked you to come over here to check the video."

Katty's heart skipped a beat.

Could she refuse to watch it? The only idea in her mind was to escape. She had to escape!
