

Chapter 100 In A Confrontation

As Yolanda turned around to face Liam, her heart raced with anxiety.

She tried to smile, but her face felt stiff. "What a coincidence, Liam," she said, her voice barely above a whisper.

Liam feigned his surprise. "Yolanda, why are you here? I thought you were at the hospital for a physical examination."

Yolanda's mind raced as she tried to come up with a plausible explanation. "The doctor suddenly called me and rescheduled for this afternoon," she said, her voice trembling slightly.

Liam looked her up and down, his gaze lingering on her curves. "Did you dress up for me, Yolanda? You look like a fairy tale princess," he said, a fake smile playing at the corners of his mouth.

Yolanda blushed and tugged at her dress, feeling suddenly self-conscious.

"Yes, I wanted to look nice for you," she said, her voice barely audible.

With a faint grin, Liam turned his gaze towards Tyler who stood there with a fuming expression on his face.

He pulled Yolanda closer to him, savoring the feeling of her soft curves against his body, and pressed his lips to hers.

At first, Yolanda stared at Liam in disbelief.

But she soon surrendered to the passion that Liam ignited in her. The spectators in the cafe couldn't help but watch the couple with interest, their eyes fixed on the dramatic scene that was unfolding before them.

Finally breaking away from the kiss, Liam held Yolanda tightly against him, his eyes glistening with emotion.

"I'm so touched by how much you care about me," he whispered in her ear, causing her to shiver with excitement. "You went to such lengths to be with me, cutting your wrist and coming to my house last night... it's just overwhelming."

Yolanda's heart fluttered at Liam's words. She felt a rush of affection and joy wash over her.

She leaned into him, her body relaxed and her eyes filled with love, responding in a sweet, coquettish voice, "Of course, you're my husband."

Bang!

Suddenly, the sound of a coffee cup crashing onto the floor filled the air.

Liam swiveled to look at Tyler, who was quivering with anger, hot coffee spilling over his trembling hands.

Liam's heart swelled with happiness, and he gazed down at Yolanda with a smile. "Do you know him?" he asked, his tone curious. "Why were you sitting at the same table?" Yolanda's mind was racing as she turned to face Tyler's enraged stare. Fear crept up on her, causing her to stutter in her response.

"He's the man ... who ... got lost in the hospital the other day," she said, trying to steady her voice. "Don't you know him, Tyler Riley? I came to see you today and was here to buy a cup of coffee. He happened to be here and wanted to thank me."

Tyler's anger simmered as he struggled to keep his composure. With an effort, he forced a charming smile and said, "I met Miss Lambert by chance, so I wanted to invite her to a cup of coffee as thanks for her help the other day."

As a gentleman, Tyler knew he had to tread carefully in his pursuit of Yolanda. He couldn't let his emotions get the best of him, not if he wanted any chance with her.

Yolanda's favoritism for Liam was unmistakable, making Tyler feel like nothing more than a side character in her life.

But he wouldn't give up that easily and resolved to ask her out again someday, despite the pang of jealousy in his chest.

Yolanda was feeling both surprised and pleased that Tyler would play along.

Little did she know that both Liam and Tyler had seen through her.

The two men were well aware of what was going on, leaving Yolanda in the dark and feeling confident in her own charm and cunning.

Liam, with his arm around Yolanda's waist, pointed at the spilled coffee on the floor and teased Tyler, "You are careless, Tyler Riley. Even with your status, you should pay for the cup."

With that, he led Yolanda away, leaving Tyler to stare after them with anger.

Yolanda clung to Liam's arm like a shy lover, afraid to look back and face Tyler's gaze.

Liam had already won her heart, and she was content to bask in his affection.

Meanwhile, Tyler watched the couple leave, still feigning a smile.

As soon as Liam and Yolanda exited the cafe, the air was thick with tension as Tyler's smile vanished. He let out a deafening roar and sent tableware flying in all directions with his fists.

Bang!

The sound of the shattering plates pierced through the previously peaceful ambiance, prompting the waiter to rush over.

Frantically trying to calm him down, the waiter said, "Sir, please calm down, or we'll have to ask you to leave."

Bang!

Tyler's rage flared as he kicked the waiter fiercely. "You think you can threaten me?" he bellowed, his face turning beet red. "I'm the general manager of the Riley Group! I have a lot of money!"

Unknowingly, many guests had taken out their phones, recording the scene as it unfolded.

Realizing he had gone too far, Tyler quickly pulled out a wad of cash and threw it on the table before bolting out of the cafe, his anger simmering inside him.

At the same time, in the Maybach.

Yolanda sank into the plush leather seat, feeling like a princess in a fairytale carriage. She looked around, taking in the opulence of the car, admiring the soft leather and the gleaming metal finishes.

She turned to Liam with a bashful grin. "Where are you taking me for our date?"

Liam's smile was soft. "I'll take you to a fancy restaurant tonight. Unfortunately, I have some urgent business to take care of now, something to do with the Riley Group." Yolanda's heart sank a little, her disappointment palpable.

She had lied to Liam earlier and didn't want to risk losing his affection. She simply nodded and turned away.

Yolanda knew that if Liam discovered her connection to Tyler while he was dealing with the Riley Group, it could spell disaster for her.

The fear gnawed at her insides as they drove in silence. Finally, Liam dropped her off at her house and headed to the Kingland Group alone, his mind racing with conflicting thoughts.

Although he was disappointed with Yolanda's behavior, Liam was determined not to let Tyler steal her away from him. ⑤

His plan had changed. Since he was now determined to take down the Riley Group, he might as well stay things with Yolanda to annoy Tyler.

As he walked into the CEO's office, he immediately summoned Julie to discuss his plan of attack.

