

Andrius frowned. "Frank, listen to me. Do not buy the shares from the Cloverfields."
He had just met Marcus, the mayor.

The Cloverfields had sustained a major loss and had filed for bankruptcy. How could they get publicly listed while facing a devastating financial crisis?

They were trying to cheat people's money and flee the city!

Fatty Frank was discouraged. "Boss, why?"

Andrius explained, "The Cloverfields are going bankrupt soon, so this is just a trap. They intentionally leaked the news and let people think this is a great opportunity. When they get the money, they will flee the city."

"That's impossible!" Fatty Frank confidently explained, "The Cloverfields are doing great! They even went on national television a few years ago, and their businesses are doing well! How can they be facing bankruptcy?"

Andrius could not be bothered to explain further. He simply said, "Believe it or not, it's up to you."

Fatty Frank hesitated. He admired Andrius who was the best fighter he had ever met in his life.

However, when it came to the stock market...

After some serious consideration and hesitation, Fatty Frank bit the bullet and decided to trust Andrius.

If he invested and the Cloverfields fled, he might lose money; if he did not invest, he would not earn a profit but would not lose anything either!

Fatty Frank knew how capable he was. He never really wanted to earn a lot of money. As long as he could stay out of trouble and live a normal life, he would be more than happy.

Later that night at Dream's Waterfront, Andrius came back and saw Luna on her phone.

His sharp eyes spotted the stock market interface on her screen. She was looking at the Cloverfields' company. She even keyed in the setting to automatically purchase the shares first thing when the stock market opened the next day.

Andrius warned her, "The Cloverfields can't even save themselves now. They are trying to cheat your money and run away. Don't buy their stocks."

Luna was in a delighted mood until Andrius ruined it with his advice.

She put her phone away and grunted coldly. "Do you even understand Sumeria's economic status? Are you some financial professor who studies the stock market? Stop being a nosy person and order people around. I don't need you to teach me how to use my company's funds."

Andrius' kind reminder was treated as nonsense, and he even got criticized by Luna. However, he could not be bothered to argue with her.

Since he already warned her, it was up to her to take his advice or not.

Luna lost her mood. She returned to her room and called Halle to complain about Andrius.

"Halle, Andrius is so full of nonsense. He sure likes to brag a lot."

Halle went silent for a moment before she asked, "Luna, what happened?"

Luna said, "I was going to buy the Cloverfields' company shares, but he told me that the company cannot even save themselves and warned me to not buy their shares... What a joke! Is he some financial advisor? Or is he some supervisor working for the Ministry of Finance? How dare he say something like that in my face?"

Her words were full of contempt for Andrius.

Halle heard Luna's complaint and she said, "Luna, why don't you think it over? Look, you were running around to gather funds in the afternoon, and now you have suddenly decided to buy the Cloverfields' company shares. If the Cloverfields really go bankrupt, your money will..."

She knew Andrius was a capable person who would never speak without thinking. He must have gotten some insider news.

Before she could finish, Luna stopped her. "Hold up, hold up! No! Don't say that! It won't happen! We are going to earn a lot of money this time, and I must seize this chance to not only get the funds for the project, but I will also use this chance to prove myself to my family! I have to go now. I'll talk to you soon."

Luna then hung up the phone.

Halle signed helplessly after the call ended. She did not expect Luna to act the opposite after listening to her advice.

Luna did not turn her decision around. In fact, it even strengthened her opinion of buying the Cloverfields' company shares.
